TDC officials admit prison deficiencies

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas prison officials candidly admit to filth, poor medical care and unsafe conditions in the state's prisons in documents filed for another federal court bout over prison reform.

Drafted by the state in preparation for an appearance next month before U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice, the paperwork reflects a new strategy by the state to avert a costly and controversial hearing, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

By confessing past deficiencies in "uncontested statements of fact" filed last week, the state is hoping to prove it is making progress in cleaning up the prison system.

The documents filed by the state cite examples of raw sewage leaking on food in a prison kitchen; hundreds of inmates referred by doctors for hospital treatment but no appointments made; waiting lists for vocational training; crowded conditions forcing inmates to sleep in halls; and other deficiencies.

"For the first time we are giving an honest evaluation of our problems," said Board of Corrections Chairman Robert Gunn.

"We are saying, 'Yes, there are a lot of things that have got to be done.' Before we told the federal court, 'There's nothing wrong and get out of here.'"

Glaring deficiencies still exist four years after Justice issued his harsh assessment of prison conditions and ordered improvements, attorneys for Texas inmates contend.

"We are saying the future has come and the court order has been in effect four years and still prisoners are suffering," said Donna Brorby, one of the attorneys representing inmates.

The state is scheduled to appear before Justice next month to defend its progress in complying with his orders. TDC attorneys are currently trying to negotiate a settlement, however, and want to postpone the hearing.

The ordered reforms take time, and the court should wait another four to six months before re-evaluating the prison system's progress, the state contends.

Since Justice issued his sweeping prison reform order in April 1981, TDC has replaced former director W.J. Estelle with Ray Procnier.

Gay rights referendum still sparks controversy

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Opponents who worked to overwhelmingly defeat two anti-discrimination ordinances that would have recognized homosexual lifestyles said Sunday that city leaders who endorsed the controversial measures must be replaced.

"There's one way we can avoid doing this again, and that's by electing godly, righteous people to office," said Dr. Steven Hotze, head of the opposition group Campaign for Houston.

The two anti-discrimination proposals, together dubbed the "gay rights" ordinance, were defeated in a referendum Saturday by more than 4-1 margins.

Neither ballot issue mentioned the words "homosexual" or "gay," but voters were asked to decide whether sexual preference should be barred as a consideration in hiring, firing and promoting city employees.

Proposition A would have barred the city from discriminating on the basis of "sexual orientation" in its hiring, promoting or firing of employees. It was rejected 198,563 to 44,706, or 81.6 percent to 18.4 percent.

Proposition B — rejected 197,763 to 43,303, or 82 percent to 18 percent — would have had city policy specifically state that the city should not have to keep track of how many homosexuals it hires.

"I hope that Mayor Whitmire sees where the real strength of the community is, and this will make a better mayor of her," said City Councilman John Goodner, who mobilized some of the most influential businessmen to fight the proposals.

Whitmire said she believe the measures were defeated because voters were confused about what each meant.

Saturday's referendum ended an emotional, at times, bitter campaign that began 13 months ago when Anthony Hall, a black city councilman proposed adding "sexual orientation" to city hiring policies that already barred discrimination on the basis of "race, color, age, disability, sex or national origin."

No action was taken until June when a city council majority narrowly approved Hall's idea. Opponents quickly gathered more than 60,000 signatures on petitions, forcing an election.

The council opted for the election, an expense of some $300,000, and forces on both sides began gathering forces and raising money.

Some of the most outspoken opponents included prominent black Concerned Pastors and Ministers of Houston, the Ku Klux Klan and the Houston Chamber of Commerce.
