Laredo tries to halt rabies outbreak

Associated Press

LAREDO — Local health officials are vaccinating hundreds of dogs in an effort to halt a rabies flareup that so far has exposed at least 20 people to the deadly disease.

Jose Gonzalez, director of the Laredo-Webb County Health Department, said 1,400 dogs were vaccinated last week in special clinics that offered rabies shots at reduced rates. "We are giving this very wide publicity," he said.

Health officials have confirmed five cases of rabid dogs in Laredo since November.

Gonzalez said 20 people were exposed to the rabid animals. Of those, only four were actually bitten.

"We're not taking any chances," he said, explaining that everyone who came in contact with the pets is getting the rabies antidote shots.

All five dogs were captured in the same area of Laredo near Zacate Creek, Gonzalez said.

"That's good in a way because it means this outbreak has not jumped to other areas of the city," he said.

Health officials have not been able to pinpoint the source of the rabies. But Gonzalez said Nuevo Laredo, across the Mexican border from Laredo, had one case of the disease in December.

The health director said it is possible someone brought a rabid animal into the city, or a rabid animal wandered into town from the surrounding countryside.

The vaccination clinics will continue for two more weeks in Laredo. A week in early February has been set aside for clinics outside the city limits.

The rabies vaccination rate before the current campaign was about 65 percent, Gonzalez said.

The rabies flareup here is the first since 1977.
