STATE AND LOCAL Catholic group sponsors talk by archbishop

By MICHAEL CRAWFORD
Staff Writer

Archbishop Rembert G. Weakland, chairman of the controversial U.S. Bishop's Ad Hoc Committee, will be on campus Friday to discuss Catholic social teaching and the U.S. economy.

Weakland's committee drafted a letter critical of the arms race, the U.S. economy and American investment in foreign countries. That letter, referred to as a pastoral, received national attention because of its involvement in what are generally considered non-religious topics.

The report says, "The East-West arms race, on both the conventional and nuclear levels, is a threat to world peace and a threat to economic justice as well."

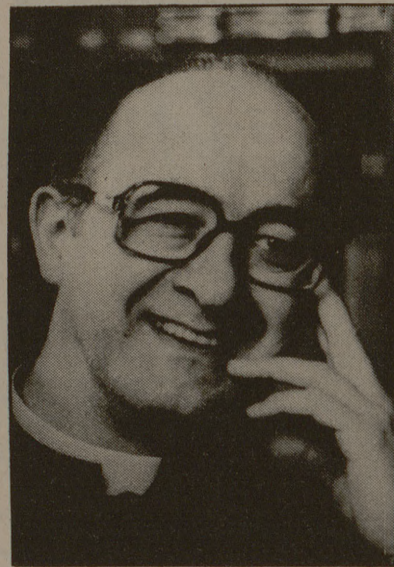

The report says the arms race drains financial resources that should be dedicated to meeting human needs. According to the report, it also diverts many excellent minds from projects that serve life and create new jobs into projects to kill people and create weapons that are virtually unusable.

Rev. Al Palermo of the Catholic Student Association says, "It was criticized because people did not read all of it. People automatically assumed the economy would be condemned. Others said that American bishops had no business interfering in the economy."

Palermo said although the bishops are not economists, their job is still to find the basic philosophies behind today's problems.

The report went on to say, "This review strongly supports the conclusion that current levels of unemployment and their attendant costs are morally unjustified."

The bishops also criticized businesses which relocate in undeveloped countries with hopes of using inexpensive labor.

Archbishop Weakland

"Foreign private investment, attracted by low-wage rates, can cut jobs in the home country and prolong the exploitation of workers in the host country, as happens today in many middle-income countries," the report said. "Moreover, both the product and the technologies of the investing firms may be inappropriate to the developing country — the former, for example, by catering mainly to a small minority of high-income consumers, the latter through capital-intensive processes that displace labor."

Weakland is on campus at the invitation of the Catholic Student Association. He will speak Friday at 7:30 p.m. in Rudder Auditorium. Following the speech there will be a question and answer session and a reception.

Palermo said this is the archbishop's first trip to Texas A&M.

Baby with disorder needs new liver

By DOUG HALL
Reporter

Travis Donald Shannon, 9 months old, needs a liver transplant.

Travis, the only son of Donald and Andrea Shannon of Normangee, suffers from a fairly rare but fatal disorder called biliary atresia.

Biliary atresia is the congenital absence of a bile duct from the liver to intestine.

Shannon, a former Texas A&M student, said the only known cure for biliary atresia is a liver transplant.

Travis' age and size increases the difficulty of finding a capable donor.

"Travis was a normal, healthy child until we discovered signs of jaundice a week after he was born," Shannon said.

"We began to notice a yellow tint to his skin and his eyes."

"The ideal age for a transplant is between one and two years old and about 25 pounds, and Travis is still growing at a normal rate. Everything is working well."

Travis already has had two operations at Texas Children's Hospital in Houston for bowel disorders and is on the waiting lists at transplant centers in Minnesota and Dallas.

Each center has its own waiting list and recipients are chosen on an availability and need basis, Shannon said.

Dr. Jerome Smith of the Texas A&M College of Medicine, Pathology and Laboratory Medicine, said the only alternative to a transplant is to purify the blood in the body, a process called hemodialysis, on a constant basis.

"He (Travis) will get serious," Smith said.

"There is a limited amount of time even with the hemodialysis."

In addition to finding a liver donor, Shannon, a post office worker, must find the funds necessary to pay for a transplant operation.

"The figure we have been given is $250,000, but we really don't know because the price can vary," Shannon said.

Shannon said he and his wife have insurance policies that will help cover the cost of an operation, but the policies will not pay for the entire bill.

"I don't like to feel like I'm going around with my hand out, but our policies just won't cover it all," Shannon said.

Friends of the Shannon's in Normangee recently established a tax free organization to help pay for Travis' medical bills.

So far the organization has collected $2,600 of their $60,000 goal.

Donations to the Travis Shannon Trust Fund are being collected at the Normangee State Bank.

Lecture opens exhibit by 18th century painter

By WENDY JOHNSON
Reporter

A lecture about "The Rowdy London of William Hogarth" exhibit will be given by two assistant English professors at 8 p.m. Thursday in 102 Horticulture Forestry Sciences Building.

Dr. David R. Anderson and Dr. Margaret J.M. Ezell will discuss Hogarth's engravings in a lecture titled "Pictur'd Morals — The Soul in Every Face." A reception will follow the lecture in the M. Benz Gallery of Floral Art.

Hogarth was an 18th century English painter and engraver, and one of the first artists in history to be regarded as a social critic as well. He would often attack English aristocracy for its dualism and cruelty.

The title of the lecture is drawn from two quotes about Hogarth: the first describing the moralistic and didactic nature of his works and the second pointing out that every face in Hogarth's usually crowded scenes displays a unique character.

The exhibit is a collection of engravings from the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation and is sponsored by a cooperative effort of the University Art Exhibits, the College of Architecture and Environmental Design and the Benz School of Floral Design.

The Hogarth engravings will be on display in the Benz Gallery in the Horticulture Forestry Sciences Building and the CAED Gallery in Langford Architecture Center 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Sunday until Feb. 22.

Tours will be available at the CAED Gallery from noon to 1 p.m. daily (except Saturdays). Group tours are available at either gallery by appointment at 845-8501.
