Willie Nelson denies IRS claims of tax fraud

WASHINGTON — Country music star Willie Nelson is singing the blues over a tax bill of more than $2.2 million he has received from the Internal Revenue Service, which has accused him of civil tax fraud. Nelson and his wife, Connie, who live near Austin, denied the allegations in a petition filed in U.S. Tax Court here and contended the income and deductions they reported for the years 1975 through 1978 were correct.

The IRS notified the Nelsons in October that they owed $1.5 million in back taxes as well as penalties of more than $750,000. The IRS contends Nelson misreported income and took improper deductions.

For the years 1975 through 1977, the IRS said, "all or part of the underpayment ... is due to fraud, which is attributable to Willie H. Nelson."

For the year 1978, "part of the underpayment ... is due to negligence or intentional disregard of rules and regulations," and resulted in a 5 percent penalty, the IRS said.

Nelson could not be reached for comment.

The IRS said Nelson understated by more than $1 million his gross income for the four years from "road shows, unexplained bank deposits, deposits to client exchange accounts, fan club income and income from 'Frank Brothers.'" "Frank Brothers" has been identified as two men who sell souvenirs.
