Austin police hold fugitive movie actor

Associated Press
NEW YORK — On the scene "Fort Apache, the Bronx" Goya was a cop. On television "Miami Vice," he was a killer. In life, he was a fugitive, wanted for murder in Texas.
From 1978, when he was shot a man in Austin, one month, when he was stopped on Long Island, Goya appeared in two feature films, a top-rated television series and several commercials and stage plays.
The 33-year-old Long Islander was arrested in the town of Shore on Jan. 22 after a police officer noticed he was not wearing a seat belt in his car, a violation of a New York state law.
Police said Goya, who was arrested in 1978, has been charged with more than 30 crimes since 1966, including assault, grand larceny, bribing a witness, possession of drugs.
Goya's lawyer, Philip M. ... says his client never knew he was wanted. If he did, why would he have spent the next seven years trying to appear before as many courts as possible?
"I don't know, sir," replied a police investigator John ... who said Texas authorities believe the fugitive was an actor who can't answer that.
Goya landed roles in several films including "Fort Apache" and "Miami Vice." In "Marathon Man" he played the street youth who helped Dustin Hoffman out of a jam.
After finishing filming in "Miami Vice," a 1977 film directed by ... where he stayed with his brother Hector Butler, who now is serving a robbery sentence in Sing Sing.
On Feb. 18, 1978, according to police, the brothers got into an argument with Rudolph Trevino at a nightclub. Shots were fired, and he was killed.
A few hours later the brothers found Trevino at a restaurant shot him with a low-caliber rifle, police said. Police won't say who believe pulled the trigger, and the brothers are charged with murder.
