Anniversary of voting rights march honored

Associated Press

SELMA, Ala. — Blacks celebrated the 20th anniversary of the voting rights march from Selma to Montgomery with a new pilgrimage Sunday to "resurrect the spirit" of the civil rights struggle.

"We have unfinished business," said the Rev. Jesse Jackson as several hundred blacks assembled for a symbolic mass crossing of the Edmund Pettus Bridge to start the five-day journey. Police clashed with black marchers at the bridge across the Alabama River on "Bloody Sunday" in 1965.

The march ends Thursday at Alabama's Capitol and follows the route that helped change the nation's political landscape by opening polling booths across the South to blacks.

At Brown Chapel, a landmark of the 1965 voting rights protest, Jackson and march organizer the Rev. Joseph Lowery were given keys to the city by Selma's white mayor, Joe Smitherman.

"We have come a long, long way," said Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. "But we have a long, long way to go."

Jackson called Selma "hallowed ground" and said Sunday's demonstration was "to resurrect the spirit of our struggle."

After a worship service, marchers formed ranks outside Brown Chapel for the eight-block walk to the bridge.

Smitherman, who acknowledged that he opposed the marchers 20 years ago, said the goal now is "to cut out all this foolish race-baiting." At one point during the church service he shared a hymnal with Jackson as they sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

What became known as "Bloody Sunday" in the annals of the civil rights movement inspired an even larger march, backed by a federal court order and National Guardsmen, on March 21, 1965.

That 50-mile journey from Selma to Alabama's Capitol, in which King joined blacks and whites from across the country, prompted Congress to pass the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The law made illegal the intimidation used to deny the ballot to blacks or discourage them from going to Deep South courthouses to register to vote.

History today

Associated Press

Today's highlight in history. On March 4, 1789, the Constitution of the United States went into effect as the first Federal Congress met in New York. The lawmakers had to adjourn for the lack of a quorum.

In 1861, the Confederacy adopted the "Stars and Bars" flag design.

In 1917, Republican Jeannette Rankin of Montana took her seat as a member of Congress, the first woman to be elected to the House of Representatives.

In 1933, in his inaugural address, President Franklin D. Roosevelt pledged effective leadership to pull the country out of the Great Depression, saying, "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

In 1952, actress Nancy Davis and actor Ronald Reagan were married.
