Waco still picks Pepper as #1 cola

Associated Press

WACO — In Waco, Dr Pepper isn't just a soft drink. It's folklore.

The fruity cola was born in the city 100 years ago, and Waco residents still drink more Dr Pepper — an average of 250 cans per person a year — than any other city in the nation, according to the soft drink company.

"It's my favorite drink," said Curtis Cleveland of the Greater Waco Chamber of Commerce. "Here at the chamber, we have a refrigerator full of nothing but Dr Pepper, diet or regular."

Last week, the Dallas-based Dr Pepper Co. announced it was selling its bottling plants in Waco and Dallas to a new management group for $95 million.

But although the sale essentially ends Dr Pepper's formal ties to Waco, the residents aren't worried. Since the new management group, Dr Pepper of North Texas, will include several of the current managers, residents say they will be dealing with old friends.

Jim Turner, chief executive officer of the new management group, said the plants in Dallas and Waco supply 3 million people in 27 countries, and account for about $125 million in sales annually.

"Dr Pepper has been active in every single community event and every aspect of the city for 100 years," Cleveland said.
