come from area restaurants, hotels and motels that are open 24-hours, he says.

"We usually make contact with the individual and find out what their plans are," Norton says. "Most of the time, when the police deal with them, they'll tell you something."

When the person being questioned obviously has no plans, College Station police direct the individual to the Mission, Norton said.

"Sometimes, all it takes is direction," he said. "They'll ask, 'well, where can we go if we can't stay here?' and we'll direct them to the Mission."

Like the lobbies of University buildings, motels and all-night restaurants, hospital lobbies are a tempting haven for the homeless.

Representatives from both St. Joseph Hospital and Humana Hospital report few problems with homeless people frequenting their lobbies. Spokesmen for both hospitals attribute their lack of problems to their security systems.

"We don't have a problem simply because we don't permit it," says Lee Hacker, director of security at St. Joseph Hospital.

Like local police, the security force at St. Joseph Hospital work with Twin City Mission to get help for the homeless people they discover. Hacker said the hospital does provide medical care for people who need it, and his department will provide transportation for people who have a place to go.

"We don't want them stewing here," Hacker said. "These people need more than just a place to sleep. They need help."

Bud Pruitt, director of security for Humana Hospital, says his security officers eliminate loitering by asking everyone to leave the hospital after visiting hours.

"The only time we have a problem with people not wanting to leave is with a family member, and then we don't force the issue," he said.

Bricks fall in high winds

Associated Press

DALLAS — A section of brick fell 34 stories from the top of a building onto the roof of an underground parking garage as high winds raced across Dallas, officials said Monday.

The section, about 15 feet by 5 feet, tumbled shortly before midnight Sunday, breaking some windows in an adjacent building and damaging some decorative tiling on a walkway below but causing no personal injury, said Bill Dean, spokesman for Dresser Industries.

South Korean ban on political activity lifted

Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — The government on Wednesday lifted a ban on political activity by 14 opposition figures, including the country's best-known dissidents who have been demanding democratic reforms.

Despite the action, Kim Dae-jung, one of the 14, will be barred from engaging in politics because of a suspended 20-year prison term, said Information Minister Lee Won-hong.

The influence of Kim Dae-jung and another leading dissident, Kim Young-sam, was instrumental in the recent surge of a new opposition group in National Assembly elections on Feb. 12.

Kim Dae-jung returned to South Korea on Feb. 6 from two years of self-exile in the United States. He had had been convicted on seditious charges in 1980.

Upon his return, he was immediately put under house arrest. With the official lifting of the four-year-old ban on political activity by the dissidents, authorities also discontinued the house arrest measure against him.

RESUME TIPS
 by Rosangela King

A job winning resume is all that counts. It's one of the main factors in assuring you that an important interview. A regular resume outline will begin with personal data such as name, university and permanent address and phone. It is very important to put this vital information at the top of your resume. Career Objective - this is the area which most of my student clientele have a hard time with. I strongly suggest brainstorming for activities and settings in which you would like to work. Make a list of each and try mixing and matching them. If your career objective is too general, it won't help you get a job. However, if it is too specific it might deter you from getting other related jobs which you could also qualify for and want. Personalize your career objective as much as possible for the job you want. As mentioned in one of my first columns, you might need more than one resume, if you have more than one area of career interest. Try looking at job advertisements for ideas, or try looking at the "Occupational Outlook Handbook" in your library, or call me for an appointment and I'll assist you the best way I know how. When we all settle back in from Spring Break, we'll continue our friendly talk and cover more of the different sections of a good professional resume.
