Judge dissolves order restraining woman's abortion

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — A judge on Wednesday dissolved a temporary restraining order and cleared the way for a 19-year-old woman to have an abortion despite the objections of her estranged husband.

"I don't want to be put in the role of murderer of a child," said State District Judge Peter Michael Curry. "But I'm a believer in the Constitution of the United States."

State District Judge James Onion issued a restraining order last week at the request of the woman's estranged husband, Keith Hayes, who claims he should be able to veto the woman's abortion plans.

Onion said before Wednesday's court session that he was informed Tuesday by Hayes' attorney, Dave Rogers, that Kim Hayes was about to undergo an abortion.

After a brief session Wednesday, Onion transferred the case to Curry, who dissolved the order.

"I can't see how I have the right to prevent this lady from having an abortion," Curry said.

The case was a showdown between anti-abortion activists, including Hayes, and pro-choice groups, who claim Mrs. Hayes has a constitutional right to abort the pregnancy.

"It's my child as well," Hayes said at Wednesday's hearing. "The baby should not be killed because she wants to get even. My baby is going to suffer for what she feels is just revenge."

Hayes said he did not believe in abortion and would be willing to pay Mrs. Hayes' medical expenses and rear the child.

"She said it was her baby and there was nothing I could do to prevent it (an abortion)," he said.

Hayes and his estranged wife, according to a petition filed last week, married Oct. 16, 1984. The document claims the woman became pregnant shortly thereafter.

The couple separated Jan. 28 and the woman told her husband of her plans to abort the pregnancy, according to the petition.
