Pope decries human rights violations, war

Associated Press
VATICAN CITY — More than 250,000 people jammed St. Peter's Square to rejoice in the resurrection of Jesus. Tens of thousands more marched through Rome to the Vatican in cool but sunny weather to protest world hunger.

Millions of Roman Catholics followed the ceremonies on live television in 35 countries.

John Paul looked refreshed, despite a midnight Mass at St. Peter's Basilica, as he celebrated Easter Mass.

At the end of the more than two-hour ceremony, John Paul moved to the balcony over the main door of the basilica to deliver his traditional message "Urbi et Orbi" — to the city (Rome) and the world.

The pope said that for nearly 2,000 years since Jesus rose from the dead, leaving an empty tomb, mankind looks upon all tombs and "questions itself ... especially when the tombs are the legacy of the hurricane of violence and destruction caused by war."

The Polish-born pontiff, who lived through the Nazi occupation of his homeland, said: "Spontaneously our memory goes back to 40 years ago when ... the Second World War, unleashed by a mad imperialist ideology, was coming to a close."

"Forty years ago the war ended. Has peace, as the result of a just order, been truly affirmed?"

He answered his own question, saying that the answer was no, in a world where "human rights are denied ... where places of torture, segregation and camps of inhuman labor continue to reap innumerable victims ... where millions of children and adults are left to die because of want, drought and malnutrition."

At the end of his address, John Paul delivered greetings in 47 languages, including Cambodian for the first time.

Elsewhere around the world, Christians celebrated the resurrection of Christ at joyous church services and sunrise assemblies.

More than 1,000 Roman Catholics converged on Jerusalem's Church of the Holy Sepulcher for a Mass conducted in front of the shrine venerated for centuries as the site of Christ's tomb. About 1,500 Protestants gathered for open-air services at the Garden Tomb, a skull-shaped hill just outside the walls of the City.

South African President P.W. Botha told an assembly of more than 2 million black churchgoers that blacks and whites should stand together against "messengers of terror." Botha spoke at the Easter assembly of the Zion Christian Church, a black fundamentalist church.

In China, foreign Christians held dawn services at the Great Wall. The visiting Italian defense minister, Giovanni Spadolini, joined thousands of Chinese for Easter Mass at Peking's Southern Cathedral. Members of the state-sanctioned Patriotic Catholic Church filled the cathedral to overflowing.

Mondale says he missed emphasizing positive side

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Walter F. Mondale, looking back on his landslide defeat in the 1984 presidential election, said Sunday he "fundamentally mishandled my case to the American people" by failing to emphasize the positive side of his message.

"They heard opportunity from the other side, they didn't hear it from me," the former Democratic presidential nominee said in an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press."

It was Mondale's first appearance in a national forum since the November election in which President Reagan carried 49 states for one of the most lopsided re-election victories in American history. Mondale carried only his home state of Minnesota and the District of Columbia.

Mondale said he continues to believe "I was essentially correct on the fundamental issues," but, he added that he was no match for President Reagan when it came to communicating with the American people.

"The fact of the matter is, President Reagan's ability to communicate — even things that I think are demonstrably not accurate — verges on genius," said Mondale. "I don't think anybody accused me of the same capability."

In the future, he said the Democrats "must find a candidate who, in addition to being right on the issues and stating them correctly, can master this modern challenge of communication in this huge country of ours."

Mondale also criticized Reagan for agreeing with Senate Republicans to a budget compromise that would cut 2 percent from the cost of living increase to program recipients.

Mondale said Reagan "backed off his commitment" made during the campaign not to tamper with Social Security.

He predicted Congress would refuse to go along with the proposal that would protect Social Security recipients against the first 2 percent of any increase in the cost of living, but not the next two percent.

Mondale disagreed with analysts who contend he was particularly hurt by a perception he was too closely tied to special interest groups such as organized labor, teachers and feminists.

"My approach was above all a commitment to the public interest and not to the special interests," he said. "But I'm not sure that's what it appeared to the American people."

He said that "where I think I fundamentally mishandled my case to the American people is that I dwelt unduly on the problems, the solution to the problems, the penalty and the sacrifice surrounding it and not enough on what my real point was that we had to do these things in order to move confidently into the future, to have the change that was essential and to have the jobs, the hope, the opportunity, the expanded prosperity that was necessary."
