Gramm forgoes taking political trip to Latin America

Associated Press
 AUSTIN — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said Tuesday he decided against visiting Central America while Texas National Guard troops are in Honduras because such a trip might look too political.
 But Gramm, R-Texas, declined to criticize Democratic Gov. Mark White's current visit to guard troops training in Honduras.
 "I thought about going," Gramm said. "In fact, I looked into it before the governor had decided to make the trip."

"But I decided against it. I thought that with the guard there it just might look political if I did it. I'm sure the governor looked at it and made a decision he wanted to do it. I certainly don't criticize that decision."

Gramm was in Austin for a speech to a joint session of the Legislature. Afterward, he told reporters he wasn't thrilled by the decision to send the troops to the troubled region, where the Texans are playing the aggressors in war games involving the regular U.S. Army and Honduran troops.

 White arrived in Honduras on Monday and Tuesday toured the Texas guard's camp.

"I would have rather the exercise be in Brazil, but on the other hand it's the kind of training that we need if we are going to integrate the guard and the reserves into the overall military establishment of the country," he said.

"That's what we are committed to, because we don't have the money for a standing army the size we need to keep the peace," said the freshman senator.

White and all Texans have a special interest in Central American affairs, said Gramm, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"I am concerned if El Salvador goes communist and becomes a staging area against Mexico that we are going to have millions of political refugees coming across our southern border," he said. "And they're not going to Massachusetts. They're coming into Texas."

'Unopposed' candidate loses school board election

Associated Press
 EL PASO — Marc Goulait found it hard to believe that he'd lost an election for a seat on a local school board, especially since he thought he was running unopposed.

"We didn't campaign," Goulait said Monday after learning the Ysleta Independent School District board seat he had sought in Saturday's election had been won by another man. "A lot of people who would have voted for me didn't come out because I was unopposed."

Dave Overvold, a civil engineer with the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, was declared the victor in the race even though he had withdrawn from the contest in March. Overvold mailed a letter March 20 to school district officials saying he had withdrawn as a candidate for a position on the seven-member Ysleta education board.

When officials received the letter, it was too late to remove Overvold's name from Saturday's ballot, but all people involved — including Overvold, Goulait, Ysleta school officials and El Paso County elections officials — said they believed Goulait officially was running unopposed.

Goulait, a general contractor, said he is angry and would have campaigned had he known he faced opposition.

College Credit: The InterFirst Student Loan.

No one really needs to be told how expensive a college education is these days. But what many don't know is where to look for help. You can start at InterFirst. By asking about an InterFirst Student Loan. Undergraduates can borrow up to $2,500 per school year, graduate students up to $5,000. And the annual current rate for first-time borrowers is only 8%, simple interest.

If your family's annual adjustable gross income is less than $30,000, you're automatically eligible. If it's more, there's an excellent chance you're eligible for all or part of the loan amount.

What's more, you have ten years to repay the loan. And you don't start until six months after graduation or withdrawal from school.

For more details, and an InterFirst Student Loan application kit, send us the coupon. Or call or visit a local InterFirst bank. Then you can stop worrying about money, and start worrying about grades.

We believe in you.

Yes, I'm interested in receiving an InterFirst Student Loan Kit.
