El Paso using swarm patrol for security

Associated Press
EL PASO — They are busy as bees. Their days are buzzing with activity. They are the unsung heroes in a game of hide-and-seek.

We could drone on, but to get to the point, this is the story of the El Paso Swarm Patrol.

This is swarm season in El Paso, said Oliver Franklin, treasurer of the El Paso Beekeepers Association. The season began around April 1, and since then, the volunteers of the swarm patrol have captured 18 swarms of honeybees. Eleven of those have been captured in the past three days, Franklin said.

One of two swarms captured Friday in the backside of a car in a downtown parking lot contained about 4,500 bees, Franklin said.

"There are about 1,500 bees to the pound," Franklin told the El Paso Times. "That was a small swarm. A big swarm is five to six pounds."

Last Saturday, he said he was called to the Southern Pacific roundhouse just east of downtown and captured a 9-pound swarm.

"They come out of the walls and ceilings of those old buildings downtown," Franklin said. "We had a pretty wet January, February and March, and wetness causes overpopulation of nests. When a nest is overcrowded, the bees swarm."

The swarm season lasts until about the middle of May, he said. In an average season, the swarm patrol captures 100 to 125 swarms, some of which contain tens of thousands of bees.

Whenever overcrowding is apparent, Franklin said, the bees sense it. In the nest, a new queen egg is laid. When it hatches, the old queen and a large group of followers fly away, leaving the new queen behind to rule over the rest of the nest.

The bees can be dangerous, Franklin said, "but only if they are attacked."

"The best thing to do when you encounter a swarm is to walk away," he said. "If they should get on you, they won't sting unless you try to mash them. If they get in your hair, don't try to knock them off or mash them or you'll be stung. The safest thing to do is to comb them out."
