Lawsuit

Heart surgeon, six others
suing investment company

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Heart surgeon Denton A. Cooley and six other investors are seeking $9.3 million from a Houston-based brokerage firm, accusing the firm of fraud in a downtown office tower investment.

The investors are suing Underwood Neuhaus & Co. for allegedly failing to keep them informed of "serious problems" in the development of the 45-story Unitedbank Plaza in downtown Houston.

Besides Cooley, investors include Edgar A. Smith, president of Alamo Barge Lines Inc. and senior chairman of the board of Commonwealth Financial Group; Houston attorney Walter P. Zivley; George C. Hardin Jr., former vice chairman of Integrated Energy Inc.; Houston oilman Loren G. Horton; and Houston surgeons Richard M. Hirshberg and Thomas M. Biggs.

The investors are suing Underwood Neuhaus and three of its executives, David M. Underwood, John R. Biggs and James G. Brannon.

The brochure Underwood Neuhaus used to explain the deal was cryptic and hard to understand, Dana G. Kirk, attorney for the investors, said.

The investors signed $8.2 million in promissory notes the developers used to secure the land loan for the project. Later, the investors renewed the promissory notes in a second investment agreement.

Underwood Neuhaus and the developer, Wortham & Van Liew, were aware the project had a $3 million cost overrun during construction and that the project had lost its financing, according to the suit filed March 29 in U.S. District Court. The investors allege that they were not told of the problems when they were asked to sign the second investment agreement.

On Sept. 20, 1984, Citicorp notified the partnership that the $94 million construction loan was in default. Citicorp later filed foreclosure proceedings against the building, but has not completed the foreclosure.
