Researcher to relive landing of French explorer in Texas

INDIANOLA — When Paul Hammerschmidt takes a big step out of a rowboat this weekend, he'll be leaping back 300 years as Calhoun County-area residents celebrate the anniversary of the 1685 landing in Texas of the French explorer La-

Hammerschmidt, a Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife fish researcher, is playing the role of the 17th century explorer in the re-enactment of the landing near what now is - or was - Indianola, an isolated former port on Matagorda Bay about 140 miles southwest of Hous-

"When you do this only once every 300 years, you try to get it right," Hammerschmidt says. On Saturday, he'll don handmade garments typical of the period, plus a long wig, and with a crew of six, paddle ashore just a few feet from where LaSalle, in the form of a large granite monument, stares out over

The re-enactment caps three years of research by Lonnie Ficklen, of nearby Port Lavaca, who has sought help from French government officials and used as a reference a journal kept by one of La-Salle's men in an effort to make the presentation as accurate as possible.

Paul Hammerschmidt is playing the role of the 17th century explorer, La-Salle. He will re-enact the landing about 140 miles southwest of Houston. Researchers used a journal kept by one of LaSalle's men to get the facts right.

"It will be as historically correct as one can make it," Ficklen says. Historians differ on why Rene Robert Cavelier Sieur de la Salle landed where he did in Texas. Some accounts say the explorer, who gained famed for expeditions in the Great Lakes areas, the Mississippi River and for establishing a settlement at Montreal, was looking for the mouth of the Mississippi when he sailed into Matagorda Bay with his four ships. Some say he was forced ashore in Texas by a storm. Nevertheless, his claim to the land for France eventually put Texas for the first time under jurisdiction of the U.S. Government when the French holdings were included in the famous Louisiana Purchase

On Saturday, a restored of junk, similar in design to one ships LaSalle used, will bring and his companions to within hundred yards of the beach, merschmidt said. Then theep whose companions include a nalist, Catholic priest, aide, a shoni Indian and his brother jump into a rowboat and hear shore.

Among those planning we hand for the landing are Hobased French Consul General Quentin and Texas Secreta State Myra McDaniel.

This week, a Texas Highway partment crew was grading each where the cermonie held. LaSalle didn't have that ury.

"Actually, they were prelitic," Hammerschmidt says." was coming in. They may ha two of their boats. And the gu dropped them off left."

Looking back over the 300 LaSalle might have considered landing the first of unforth things to come.

His inland Texas settlemen St. Louis, fell victim to Indian disease. On March 19, 1687,2 43, he was killed near Navaso one of his own men.
