Herschel Walker eligible if NFL draft on schedule

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The mystery used to be who would be No. 1 — which college superstar would be the first one picked in the National Football League draft. Now, it's who will draft Herschel Walker, a third-year pro — if there is a draft on Tuesday.

The Houston Oilers have said they are prepared to file a lawsuit Monday seeking a temporary restraining order to delay the draft until NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle's decision on the status of Bernie Kosar is reviewed.

The Oilers are distressed over Rozelle's decision to give the University of Miami quarterback the option of entering the regular draft or a supplemental draft this summer.

Kosar chose the latter, which would allow the Cleveland Browns, who hold the first supplemental pick, to take him.

Houston, which held the first uncommitted pick for Tuesday (No. 2 overall behind the Buffalo Bills, who already have signed Virginia Tech defensive end Bruce Smith), traded it to Minnesota, which wanted Kosar. In exchange for switching first-round picks with the Vikings (who were No. 3 overall), Houston also received Minnesota's second-round pick — but agreed to return it if the Vikings could not persuade Kosar to enter Tuesday's draft.

They couldn't. Kosar, a junior and a native Ohioan who intends to graduate this summer and thus would be eligible now, decided to pass. He said he wanted to play for the Browns. On the same day Minnesota made its trade with Houston, the Browns made one with Buffalo to obtain the first pick in any supplemental draft.

An NFL spokesman confirmed Sunday that Richard Caldwell, an attorney representing the Oilers, had called Jay Moyer, Rozelle's counsel, and told him the Oilers were considering the lawsuit.

Another glamour quarterback eligible for this year's draft was Houston Trophy winner Doug Flutie of Boston College. However, he chose to sign with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League, the same team that employs Walker, the superb running back.

A team selecting either Flutie or Walker would be gambling on the USFL folding. Both have contracts through the rest of the decade.

A team selecting Walker instead of a collegian could wind up with a wasted draft pick if the USFL survives in 1986 and beyond. Or it could end up with a "franchise" player like the Los Angeles Rams' Eric Dickerson.

Houston, as part of its trade with Minnesota, extracted a promise that the Vikings would not pick Texas A&M defensive end Ray Childers. The Oilers are expected to take him after Minnesota selects offensive tackle Bill Fralic of Pitt.

Aggie tracksters earn bow in weekend's Drake Relays

By CINDY GAY
Sports Writer

After the Drake Relays, the Texas A&M track team can take a bow.

The Ags could be likened to the 16th century pirate, Sir Francis Drake, who knelt before Queen Elizabeth's court after a prosperous series of piracy runs. Both can boast that they carted home the sought-after treasure.

Arturo Barrios had his sights on one goal at this weekend's track meet — to qualify for the 10,000-meters in the NCAA Championships. A second place finish in a time of 28 minutes, 43 seconds put Barrios right where he wants to be with an option to run the 5,000 or the 10,000 in May.

"If it weren't so hot and humid, he might try to run both (races at the NCAAAs)," said Assistant Coach Ted Nelson.

Because the NCAA meet will be in Austin, Nelson said Barrios will probably run the 10,000.

"The longer the race, the better chance we have," Nelson said, adding that most of the other runners will be unaccustomed with the Texas climate.

Barrios took the lead at the onset of the Drake Relays' 10,000 because no one else was willing to push the pace, but was consequently out-kicked on the last lap.

"The kid from Iowa (University) just laid on his shoulder," he said. "Barrios had to do all the work himself."

A&M's Ethan Glass took second in the high jump with a leap of 7 feet, 3.5 inches, and Francisco Olivares was the No. 3 man after the triple jump competition with his longest jump series of 51.7 feet.

After fouling on a couple of jumps that were over 26 feet, a length that would have won the long jump, Chris Walker had to settle for fourth place with a jump of 24.10 feet. Walker's previous best was 25.3, so the track future looks bright for the freshman from Iowa.

The 400-meter relay team of Lawrence Mitchell, Tony Grier, Darrell Austin, and Tommy Alsbrooks placed fifth with a time of 39.98 seconds. They combined better baton exchanges with a last minute exchange of Alsbrooks for Rod Richardson to re-qualify for the NCAA Championships.

Last week, the team with Richardson crossed the finish line in 38.80. Because Richardson had a sore leg, the Aggies made the substitution and now they may choose either foursome for the NCAAAs.

Nelson said this is an especially nice option for the team, "in case of just want to save Rod for the 100-meters."

Both the sprint medley relay team of Alsbrooks, Austin, Maurice Holt and Dean Stone and the mile relay team of Grier, Holt, Kyle Hargrett and Alsbrooks qualified for the finals but were not able to compete because Holt pulled his hamstring during his leg of the mile relay.

"We really hated for that to happen," Nelson said, adding that Holt had turned in a personal best performance in the sprint medley.

Huey Treat also broke his own record by 10 seconds in the 1000 meters, finishing in 30.28 minutes, 12th place.

The Ags will head to the Texas Collegiate Invitational next weekend, taking only half the square cause of upcoming final exams.

A&M netters search for NCAA bid

By MARYBETH ROHSNER
Sports Writer

"I'm gonna write my congressman if we don't get an NCAA bid," said A&M Coach David Kent after his netters came home with a disappointing fourth-place finish at the SWC tournament in Corpus Christi over the weekend.

And who knows? Senator Lloyd Bentsen may have fared pretty well down in Corpus. At least Bentsen, being a lawyer, has some court sense, which is something the No. 10 Aggies lacked.

The women's team, however, recorded some of their biggest wins all season in Corpus.

Five of A&M's seven men's entries didn't make it past the semi-finals on Saturday. The biggest upset of the day was top-seeded Grant Connell's loss to Rice's Scott Melville. Melville, No. 72 in the nation, defeated No. 9 Connell, 6-2, 6-2.

"Grant just didn't play very well," Kent said. "But who can criticize a guy who won eight straight matches during the season?"

The Ags who did make it to the finals, however, came through with flying colors. The Ags' No. 3 player, Kimmo Alkio, defeated Texas' Charles Beckman, 6-4, 5-7, 7-5, in what Kent described as "the most exciting match in our history."

"He was down by four (games in the first set), and he just came through under pressure," Kent said. "He's a streetfighter. He's one of the greatest competitors I've seen."

Marcel Vos and senior Greg Hill closed out the finals with a victory in No. 2 doubles, nabbing the SWC title and a promising shot at an NCAA bid.

"We got more points than we've ever scored," Kent said.

A&M finished with a team total of 58 points behind first-place SMU with 73 points, second-place Texas with 62 points and third-place Arkansas with 59 points.

The Aggie women netters captured third in the SWC (courtesy behind Texas and SMU).

"Those girls played some super tennis," Kent said of Jan Baldwin's Aggies. "I think Coach Baldwin has done an outstanding job."

Nandini Rangarajan and Kim Labuschagne both took victories in the finals. The Ags' No. 1 doubles duo of Vannie Akagi and Gaye Lynn Gensler lost to Texas' Beverly Bowes and Becky Callahan in their final match.

"They played well and made a lot of points," Kent said.

The Lady Ags are not ranked high enough to pull off an NCAA bid, but the men will be biting their nails until May 13 to see if they will travel to Athens, Ga., for the NCAA tournament.
