Texas A&M defensive end Ray Childress (above) got the "thumbs up" from the Houston Oilers Tuesday in the NFL draft. The Oilers used their first choice, third overall, to select Childress, an All-Southwest Conference standout for the Aggies last season.

Aggie Draft

"Yes, sir," said an excited Darwin. "I'm fired up. I'm very excited also. I'll do all I can."

Darwin hung up and said, "It's the Dallas Cowboys."

Darwin was officially the 119th player taken in the draft, the seventh player in the fifth round.

Screams of excitement filled the room and roommate Polk jumped up and down.

"I can't believe that," said Polk, a big Cowboy fan.

Darwin was, needless to say, was ecstatic.

"I am very excited," Darwin said. "If I could have picked any team, it would have been the Dallas Cowboys. I'm glad something finally happened and I just praise God for this opportunity. I couldn't ask for anything more."

How was the Houston product to celebrate the occasion?

"Finish my English paper I guess," said Darwin, who is projected as either a guard or center.

Soon after, wide receiver Jimmy Teal got word that he was a Buffalo

Bill, the 130th player taken.

Tight end Mark Lewis was the 155th player selected, going to the Green Bay Packers in the sixth round.

In an unusual move, Ken Reeves, a 6-6, 270-pound offensive tackle, was the very next pick, going to the Philadelphia Eagles as the 156th player.

"I'm pretty excited," Reeves said. "I really thought I'd go a little higher. The scouts and my agent kind of indicated to me that I would go fairly high. I just kind of got lost in the shuffle."

"I talked to the head coach, player personnel director and the offensive line coach today. They were optimistic about me helping the team have a pretty good chance of making the team."

Although he didn't know much about the Eagles, Reeves said he was ready to contribute.

"I really don't know what the record was last season," he said. "I hope I can contribute wherever I can."

Reeves said he would fly to "City of Brotherly Love" as soon as possible.

"I am supposed to go tomorrow for a banquet," Reeves said, "but I can't. I have a final. I will go soon, time soon hopefully."

Besides playing dominoes, Reeves played a waiting game.

"All day I sat by the phone," Reeves said. "I didn't even eat. It was a big relief when they called. Later it got the more worried I got, I am really relieved."

Thomas Sanders received his early Wednesday morning. He was the 246th draft pick, going to the Chicago Bears.

Six others were relieved.

Others such as Ken Ford were playing the waiting game.
