NBA final sports new stars

Associated Press
INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Boston Celtics' Kevin McHale and James Worthy of the Los Angeles Lakers are a defensive puzzle for opposing coaches K.C. Jones and Pat Riley in the NBA Championship Series.
 "Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Magic Johnson and Larry Bird already are superstars, but Worthy and Kevin are becoming the superstars in this series," Celtics Coach K.C. Jones said Tuesday after a practice for Game 4 Wednesday night in the Forum.
 The Lakers lead Boston 2-1 in the best-of-7 series, despite the efforts of McHale, a 6-foot-10 center-forward who scored 31 points for the Celtics on 10-for-13 shooting in Game 3 Sunday. The 6-9 Worthy, meanwhile, scored 29 points, all of them in the second and third quarters when the Lakers took control of the game and went on to win 136-111.
 "There's no one on our team who can guard Worthy well, and maybe no one in the league," Jones added.

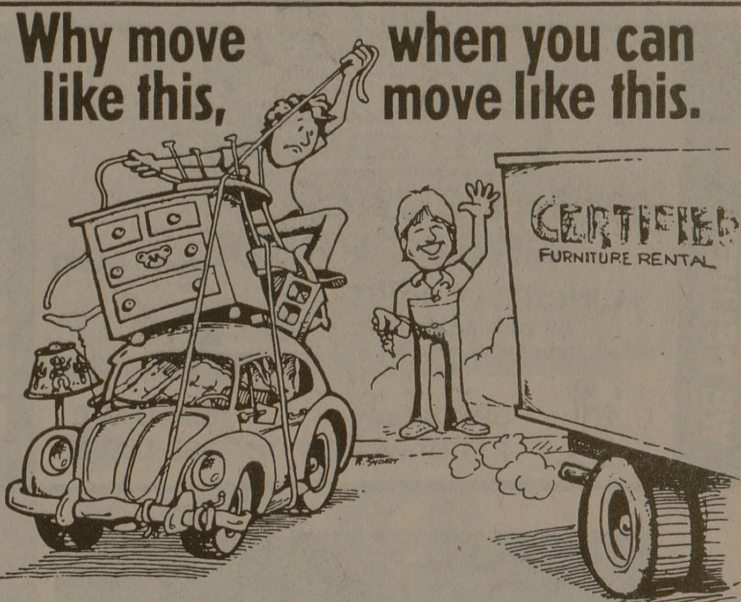

"But they don't have anyone who can guard McHale 1-on-1 either," Riley said. "McHale has caused us the most problems defensively. He's a great post-up player and we haven't defended him that well. On Sunday, he was moving so quickly inside that it defeated the double-team."
 Both coaches said the key to Worthy's and McHale's game is quickness inside against bigger men. And both can take advantage of their size against smaller players when teams try to match their quick moves.
 "McHale and Worthy are much the same player in that they are very quick for their size," Riley said. "One player can't stop them from getting a good shot."
 McHale, however, scoffs at the notion that he has become the key player in the Celtics' offense. "Larry is the guy to carry us," Mc-

Hale said of Bird, who has missed 25 of his 42 shots in the two Boston losses. "We go where Larry takes us and he can take us anywhere. I'm like anyone else. Sometimes my shot goes in and sometimes it doesn't."
 But McHale, usually guarded by 6-8 Kurt Rambis or 6-10 Bob McAdoo, is finding his shots go in much more frequently than they miss.
 He's made 26 of 42 shots in the series, or 61.9 percent.
 Meanwhile, Worthy started slowly in the first period Sunday, missing all three of his shots.
 "I was allowing them to double-team me," Worthy said. "I was holding the ball a count too long. When I reacted quicker after getting the ball, they couldn't react fast enough to double-team me and I had good second and third quarters. My advantage is my quickness against bigger guys. I want to try to get them in foul trouble."

Bates still waiting for paycheck

Gunslingers' inaugural season last year. He stepped down last summer and became head of football operations when Bates was named coach.
 "Any man in a good state of mind would be gone from there," Bates said. "He had to have something that binds him there. He wanted out last year."
 Bates said he still believes the current season could have been a success if not for the team's financial problems. The team has not received two paychecks due in May.
 "It's a crying shame," he said. "With a few players and a good organization, it could have been a good season."
 The Gunslingers are now 3-12, but Bates isn't bitter.
 "Just the experience of being there was a positive," he said. "Through the losses, you still learn. That learning process was invaluable."
 "Every day was a chaotic day. Day after day nothing happened positive. But I'll say this. The Guns are playing harder than (the) Los Angeles (Express), L.A. has been totally embarrassing."
 The Express, under head coach John Hadl, do not have a true owner and the team is being compensated by other league owners.
 Meanwhile, Manges has until Saturday to make good on the May 14 payroll or the players will become free agents.
