Plitt planning to build new six-screen theater

By PAUL HERNDON
Reporter

Plitt Southern Theatres Inc. announced plans Monday to build a six-screen theater on the corner of University Drive and Tarrow Street. It will be part of the new University Park multi-use center.

The company plans to open the new theater in December, said Plitt Cinema III manager, John Hunt.

Hunt said the decision to build the new theater is not purely economical. It also is an attempt to bring better entertainment facilities to Bryan-College Station.

"The whole idea behind the new Plitt," he said, "is to appeal to students, and the local population, by bringing high quality sight and sound techniques to the movie-going public."

The new theater will be a 20,700-square-foot building with an eight-sided concession stand. Maximum capacity will be around 1,500 people with a parking area for 600 cars.

When the new theater is finished, Plitt and locally owned Schulman Theaters will each own 12 screens in the Bryan-College Station area.

Hunt said he believes the area can support 24 movie screens.

"Right now you can go to a video store and see that only about 60 percent of their inventory has been shown at a theater here," he said. "Some of the movies may not be high-budget films, but movies like 'Porky's' were low-budget films that caught on big at the box office."

SPCA sponsors dog dip and bath Sunday

The Brazos Valley SPCA will be having a dog dip on Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. in the Manor East Mall parking lot. A flea dip will be given for a donation of $3 and a bath and a dip for $6. For further information, please contact the Brazos Valley SPCA. Please bring a leash so that you may restrain your dog. Puppies less than 6 months old and dogs more than 8 years old should not be dipped. The SPCA will be happy to bathe these dogs.

Group: some colleges not using funds earmarked for needy

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas A&M is among several state colleges not spending all the money the Legislature earmarked for education of needy black and Hispanic students, according to the Mexican American Legislative Caucus.

Since 1975, state senior and junior colleges have been directed to set aside a certain percentage of their tuition revenue to make student loans.

But many colleges have let this loan money accumulate as a surplus, Rep. Al Luna, D-Houston, chairman of the caucus, told a news conference Thursday.

"The astronomical percentages of surplus funds in so many institutions clearly demonstrate that we are continuing to perpetuate the problem of denying minority students the opportunity to take full advantage of a college education even here in Texas," Luna said.

Luna said figures from the Texas College Coordinating Board indicate that 59 percent of the student loan money was not spent last year. Junior colleges had a surplus of 139 percent, including money left over from previous years, Luna said.

"I think it is a failure of the institutions to get out and find students who need the money," said Luna.

He said the tripling of college tuition and President Reagan's threats to cut financial aid could potentially combine to hurt many minority students unless something is done at the state level.

"I think just about all institutions now are accessible by minority students. In every institution of the state there are black kids or Hispanic kids that are in geographic reach of the institution, but maybe not in economic reach," Luna said. "I think it then becomes the responsibility of the institutions to outreach those students. I think with a little bit of effort every institution could reach those students."

Luna said the Mexican American Legislative Caucus had complained to the College Coordinating Board, but the board feels it does not have authority to force colleges to spend the money.

However, the board is asking for a report within 30 days on the unspent funds.

"This may be something we can consider in the next Legislature," he said.

Luna said a study by the caucus showed that among senior state institutions, the University of Houston, Pan American University and Texas Southern University have spent the student aid funds.

East Texas State University at Texarkana has an unspent total of 513 percent, apparently accumulated over several years, Luna said. Midwestern State University has 367 percent, Sul Ross State University 396 percent and West Texas University 267 percent.

Texas A&M University has a surplus of 15 percent and University of Texas at Austin 6 percent, Luna said.

Among state junior colleges, Ranger Junior College has a surplus of 1,157 percent while Texarkana and Wharton County junior colleges each have a surplus of 633 percent, he said.

Mother, state at odds over care of retarded child

Associated Press

GALVESTON — The state of Texas and a Galveston County woman are in dispute over whether the state should care for the woman's 8-year-old mentally retarded daughter because the mother refuses to care for her.

"I have been accused of abandoning her and I know it sounds cold," says Kathleen Gomez, 25, of Bayou Vista. "But she's in a setting now where her needs are being met. I'll go to jail before I take her home."

The daughter, Melissa Collins, was born with a genetic defect and has been in the Beaumont State Respite Center since April 9. The facility is intended for short-time care of retarded children. Gomez, however, has refused to retrieve the girl.

The state was given temporary custody of Melissa last month and remains in the center while state officials try to arrange for a foster home.

Gomez contends she is within her rights to demand that the state care for the child because she cannot provide the kind of care needed and she can't afford a private hospital.

At the same time, however, she says she should not have to give up legal rights to the child.

"I shouldn't have to give up one right to gain another right," Gomez said Wednesday after a state judge delayed a hearing on the matter until next week.

State officials say they have no room in facilities for Melissa so they want the mother to take the daughter back. Gomez is refusing.

"The mother says she's not willing to take care of Melissa, so we're trying to recruit a foster family," Beverly Nussbaumer, director of Children's protective Services for the Galveston County area, said. "We're between a rock and a hard place."

Nussbaumer, however, said none of the state hospitals has room for Melissa, described by her mother as an "8 year-old child with a 9-month-old mind."

"She has to be watched 24 hours a day," Gomez said. "She wears diapers and she has to be fed. When she was home, we had to tie a sheet over the top of the crib so she couldn't get out. She had this habit of getting out of her crib and taking nocturnal journeys."

Gomez said a psychiatric report supports her contentions, and the report will be used at the court hearing to bolster her bid for permanent placement in a state institution.

Demonstrators oppose aid to contras

Protesters gather at Sen. Bentsen's office

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Peaceful demonstrators visited U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's office Thursday to protest a vote in support of aid to Nicaraguan rebels.

"They are prepared to be arrested," said Prentiss Kiddie, spokesman for the Austin Emergency Response Network.

"It's totally peaceful and very cable," said Pete Geren of Bentsen's Austin office.

"We have talked with these people before," Geren said. "At this point appears to be one of a series of meetings with them because they are opposed to the senator's position on the aid to Central America."

Geren said about 30 demonstrators appeared first in the office reception area, then dwindled to about 12 people.

Riddle said the group would be a street demonstration in front of the federal building Friday, one of a number of demonstrations scheduled across the nation to protest aid vote.

"We are here to let not only the senator, but Congress and the American people know how strong we oppose his actions against Nicaragua and the people of Central America," said a prepared statement from the Austin group.

On Wednesday, the House voted to authorize $27 million in new aid to the Contras 248-184. The House's vote was praised by President Reagan.
