Shuttle to test Star Wars laser

Royal mission begins

Associated Press
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — With a Saudi prince and a French test pilot as passengers, Discovery left Earth on Monday to launch three satellites, scan the Milky Way for a black hole and conduct the first space test of a "Star Wars" laser.

"The view is fantastic from here and we wish you were with us," Prince Sultan Salman Al-Saud told Mission Control.

Eight hours after reaching orbit 200 miles above the globe, the crew launched a satellite for the Mexican government. The satellite, called Morelos-A, was sent spinning out of the shuttle's cargo bay at 50 revolutions per minute while Discovery was over the equator, 1,700 miles south of the tip of Baja California.

"Nominal, nominal, nominal," said astronaut John Fabian after the Morelos launch. "Nominal" is the astronaut way of saying that everything went as planned.

"A great job," said mission control.

Forty-five minutes after the deployment, a rocket attached to the satellite sent Morelos toward its duty station 22,300 miles above Earth.

The satellite, named in honor of a hero of Mexico's independence, will bring advanced telecommunications to the most remote parts of a country where one quarter of the population has no access to telephones and television.

Another satellite, owned by a consortium of 22 Arab nations, is to be launched Tuesday. Sultan, a 28-year-old nephew of Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, is on the flight to observe the deployment of Arabsat.

The third satellite, Telstar 3D, will be sent spinning out of the cargo bay Wednesday to join AT&T's communications network.

Each of the satellite owners is paying NASA about $11 million for the shuttle delivery service.

On Thursday, the astronauts will put an experiment platform on board to examine what may be a black hole lurking in the center of the Milky Way galaxy, devouring stars, cosmic dust and gas at a rapid rate. The platform will be retrieved Saturday and used again for different experiments on later flights.

The Star Wars research group using the shuttle to test the ability of a laser tracking system based on Maui, Hawaii.

Science students must take exam

Any junior or senior in the College of Science who has not previously taken the English Proficiency Examination should plan to take the test June 27 unless they have completed English 301 with a minimum grade of C. Students in the College of Science must pass the proficiency exam or satisfactorily complete English 301 by the spring semester of their junior year in order to qualify as a degree candidate.

The English Proficiency Exam will be administered by the English Department. Students in the Biology, Chemistry, Mathematics and Physics Departments should register for the exam in 152 Blocker before June 27.

Food distributed to CS families today
