NBA draft

Mavs grab 'poor man's Larry Bird,' cure center troubles with 7-footers

Associated Press

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks picked Washington's Detlef Schrempf, a "poor man's Larry Bird," and then set out to cure their center ills by taking a pair of 7-footers in the NBA draft Tuesday.

Dallas used two of its three first-round draft choices for Bill Wennington of St. John's and Uwe Blab of Indiana in a move Coach Dick Motta said should give the team the NBA-caliber center it has craved.

"If one touches and succeeds and carries his position, we can surround him now with quality players," Motta said. "If one of these two fellows can hit, we're going to have a very nice team."

Despite the longing for a center, which dates back to the franchise's founding five years ago, Motta said the 6-foot-9 Schrempf was too good to pass up with the eighth pick of the draft.

"Schrempf is the only player we did not interview, which is typical," Motta said. "We didn't think he'd be there."

One attraction of both Schrempf and Blab, both natives of West Germany, is that they began their basketball careers late and are likely to have more room for improvement than U.S.-bred athletes.

he can move into a starting role for Dallas.

"I feel that I'm capable of doing that," he said. "It doesn't bother me (going to a city hungry for an effective center). I like a lot more than going into a team where I'd have to sit on the bench a long time."

Competing with Blab will prove both, he said.

"Dallas doesn't have big men right now and I know that they wanted to fill that void. I think I was good (to draft both). It's going to be great. In practice, when two big men play against each other, they can only improve and make each other better..."

"With Detlef, we're really going to make our presence felt in the NBA and help Dallas come a long way."

Schrempf averaged 15.8 points per game his senior year at Washington, with a shooting percentage of .558. In three NCAA playoff games, he averaged 23.1 points per game and 8.7 rebounds, and in Olympic competition with the West German team he averaged 18.8 points and 8 rebounds per game.

He was the only Pac-10 player to rank in the top 10 in four different categories — scoring, rebounding, assists and field goal percentage.

Rockets go for guards with picks, take Tulsa star to fuel backcourt

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets, looking to beef up their backcourt to complement the "Twin Tower" offense of Ralph Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon, took Tulsa guard Steve Harris as their first choice in Tuesday's NBA college draft.

Harris, a 6-foot-5, 195-pounder from Blue Springs, Mo., finished his four years at Tulsa as the school's all-time leading scorer with 2,272 points.

"I'm very happy, very excited about getting the opportunity to play," Harris said. "I didn't have any idea where I would be going."

Harris was the 19th player selected in the draft, a somewhat uncustomary position for the Rockets, who have had the first choice overall in each of the past two college player drafts.

Two years ago, they picked Sampson out of the University of Virginia, along with Louisville forward Rodney McCray, another early first-round pick. Last year, it was Olajuwon, from the University of Houston, who topped the NBA draft order.

Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson said Harris was the man he was after this year.

"He's a terrific player, a good shooter," Patterson said.

Harris said he had never been to Houston and never played against any of the Rocket players in their collegiate days. He said, however, that he was familiar with the team.

Harris, who carries the nickname "Silk" because of his smooth play, also is a strong defensive player, winding up his college career as Tulsa's all-time leader in steals with 271.

He had a rough start at Tulsa, breaking his jaw in his first exhibition game as a freshman, then breaking his nose a week later. But he still scored 311 points in his first year, a school record for freshmen. He also set a school record for points by a sophomore, 574, and broke the all-time school record as a junior.

His 23.6 points per game this past season was second in the Missouri Valley Conference to Wichita State's Xavier McDaniels. Seattle's first-round choice and the fourth player picked overall.

The Rockets, who had no second round pick, also announced Tuesday the signing of four-year University of Houston starter Michael Young, who was the Boston Celtics' top draft choice last year.

Patterson said the Rockets and Young had agreed on a two-year pact. Young was cut by the Celtics and played most of last season with the Detroit Spirits of the Continental Basketball Association.

Young will join former collegiate teammates Olajuwon and Larry Micheaux on the Rockets.

Spurs trade Banks for higher pick, pull unexpected name from hat

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs on Tuesday drew a name out of the NBA draft hat no one expected — small forward Alfredrick Hughes of Loyola.

The Spurs, who finished 41-41 last season, picked up the 6-5 Hughes at the No. 14 spot in the first round of the NBA draft.

The choice was set up after the Spurs made a last minute Gene Banks trade to Chicago for 6-10 forward Steve Johnson and the No. 29 choice overall in the draft.

The Spurs drew Mike Brittain, a 7-0 center from South Carolina, at No. 29, then selected forward Tyrone Corbin, 6-6, of DePaul at the No. 35 draft position in the second round.

Hughes, the second best scorer in the NCAA his senior year, "scores in bunches. He's a proven scorer," said Spurs coach Cotton Fitzsimmons.

"He could come off the bench and score for you. He plays very physical and does get his share of rebounds," Fitzsimmons said.

Hughes, in a conference call to reporters at Spurs headquarters, said he was "very surprised" the Spurs picked him.

"They're going to need some scoring out of me," he said. "I want to be in a situation where I can help out on the team."

Hughes, said Spurs General Manager Bob Bass, "could give us that big time score. He's got a bull-type body like Calvin Natt (Denver Nuggets)."

The Spurs scouted Hughes at the Aloha Classic for first-round draft possibilities.

"We got high on him but we dropped off until we got Steve Johnson," Bass said.

Hughes, who had been playing at guard at Loyola, averaged 24.3 points per game and 8.2 rebounds.

He will be playing at small forward if he makes the team, Bass said.

Johnson, who Bass called an adequate scorer and rebounder, was on Fitzsimmons' team at Kansas City before he was traded to Chicago last year. The Kings drafted him at No. 7 in the first round of the 1981 draft.

He averaged 10 points a game and almost six rebounds last season with the Bulls.

"Our size up front has completely changed," Bass said, adding that more changes would be made on the team in the future.

Bass praised Banks, who averaged 9.5 points per game and 5.4 rebounds.

"He was a vital part of our training game and probably one of the best offensive rebounders in franchise history," he said.

Bass described Brittain as the best shot blocker at the Aloha Classic.

"He's a project. But he's a guy we can come in with and build around," he said.

Bass scotched speculation the Spurs drafted Hughes to set up another trade.

"We have no interest in trading Hughes," he said. "We've taken the approach we're not going to let anyone take our players."
