Official asks for rehearing of coal case

Associated Press
AUSTIN — State Land Commissioner Garry Mauro asked the Texas Supreme Court Thursday to reconsider a decision that Mauro estimates could cost the Permanent School Fund $918 million in mineral revenues.

The court recently ruled that the state does not own the coal and lignite under 817 acres in Webb County. Instead, the court gave ownership of minerals within 200 feet of the surface to surface owner H.D. Schwarz, who leased the land for strip mining in 1978.

Mauro said in a briefing that the owner was not an unwilling victim in the mining of the minerals. "It must not be forgotten that this lease was executed by the surface owners for themselves, and as agents of the state," the commissioner said. "The state did not force them to lease it; they did it of their own free will."

According to Land Office records, the surface owners in the case, including Schwarz, have collected $602,781 as a result of their partnership with the Permanent School Fund, which receives income from state-owned minerals, Mauro said.

The fund is used to support public education in Texas. "Despite the rich rewards received by the petitioners, and despite their agreement that such compensation adequately protects them for all damages to the soil, they ask this honorable court to rob the Permanent School Fund of Texas of its share of the mineral revenues from this lease," Mauro said.

Proposal will 'hurt oil industry'

Governors object to tax plan

Associated Press
AUSTIN — Govs. Mark White of Texas and George Nigh of Oklahoma said Thursday just the suggestion that tax incentives for the oil and gas industry might be withdrawn will hurt the industry, and the nation.

"What this uncertainty in the tax impact has already done in Texas is to decrease the utilization of drilling rigs by 33 percent during the first six months (of 1985) and decrease by 33,000 the number of industry-related jobs in this state," White said.

Nigh said, "The treasury (department) proposal in itself, as was pointed out very adequately by Gov. White, damaged the industry — just the fear, waiting for the other shoe to drop — created problems within the industry, within the economic development of our state, within the national security of our country."

White and Nigh were co-hosts for the 50th anniversary meeting of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission. The IOCC has 36 member states, and 25 answered the roll at the main session Thursday.

The governors' messages were similar — the industry needs tax incentives to explore for oil and gas so the United States can reduce its dependence on petroleum imports.

"Isn't it obvious that this nation simply cannot run without adequate supplies of oil and gas, that America couldn't even get up and go to work in the morning without it?" asked White. "Isn't it obvious that any reduction of the industry's momentum would be a severe setback to the entire nation?"

"We must emphasize that our Defense Department operates with primary energy resources. "We have spent literally hundreds of billions of dollars, and I think people throughout this country and particularly in Texas recognize the need to build a strong national defense, and yet I will suggest to you that the treatment given to the oil and gas industry by this current administration's tax proposals would suggest to you that there are alternative fuel sources for the operation of a B-1 bomber and an M-1 tank.

"They don't run on coal or oil, wood, and the sooner our Congress and our administration understands that, the sooner, I think, they will understand the ingredients we speak of — for national security, we must have a secure energy policy."

Nigh said, "If we can't have energy independence, we can't be independent — it's that simple."

He said he had personally asked President Reagan for a meeting to talk about oil and gas.

Retire

will be forfeited upon retirement, he says.

Persons wishing to participate in the program must apply no later than 90 days prior to the retirement date, he says.

According to the policy statement, the department or administrative unit head will review the application with the employee and then decide whether to recommend the approval.

If the department head approves the application, he must demonstrate that the rehiring is in the best interest of the System, the policy says.

"The early retirement program was not meant to be seen as the right of an employee," Lancaster says. "In other words, the employee does not have the right to demand to retire early and then come back on a part-time basis. It wouldn't make sense from an institutional standpoint because there might not be anything worthwhile for a person to do on a part-time basis."

Lancaster says the program is voluntary and will not be used to get rid of unwanted employees.

"It (the program) is not a means to get rid of what some people call 'dead wood,'" he says. "It's entirely voluntary on the part of the participant. I'm sure administration at all levels would discourage the urging of the subject from the standpoint of the administration on down to the person saying 'why don't you consider this' because that's not the intent of this program at all."

Defense

now receiving retirement pay nor the 2.1 million people now in uniform would have their benefits reduced.

The cuts mean the Pentagon will only put aside $14.2 billion next year for retirement, rather than the $18.2 billion which had been requested.

The Senate proposed a smaller cut — $1.8 billion — in retirement.

The House also gave voice-vote approval to a proposal making espionage a crime punishable by death under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The measure was sponsored by Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., who said, "I can think of nothing that's more dramatically demonstrated the need for this than the Walker case."

That was a reference to the current Navy spy case, in which four men are charging with passing secrets to the Soviet Union.

The Nicaraguan debate was the latest round in the long-running fight over the administration's Central America policy.

While Reagan has said he wouldn't use American combat forces there, he has strongly criticized the Sandinistas and his administration is openly supporting a force of 12,000 to 15,000 Contra rebels.
