Hospitals add to staff, meet court order

Associated Press

AUSTIN — State mental hospitals met a court-ordered deadline for increased staffing but could have problems staying in compliance, the coordinator of a special panel said Wednesday.

The Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation is under an order by U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders of Dallas to reduce the number of patients or hire more mental health workers.

Sanders had set a May 31 deadline for the agency to either hire 900 workers or reduce the patient load by 900.

The hospitals achieved compliance through a combination of patient reduction and hiring, according to the court-appointed panel monitoring MHMR. David Pharis, panel coordinator, said the actual change was a net of 925.

A report showing the department's progress was filed Tuesday in Sanders' court.

The overall goal is a staff-patient ratio of 1-to-5 during day shifts and 1-to-10 at night by September.

The report expressed concern about the department's ability to remain in compliance since "... the rate of discharging patients from the hospitals may be slowing."

The report also said "... that the rate of staff attrition in the hospitals is affecting the hospitals' capacity to remain staffed at authorized levels."

During a Wednesday interview, Pharis said it has become more difficult to find patients who can be released because most of the patients who could be discharged have already been released. The remaining ones are quite ill, he said.

The 1985 Legislature gave MHMR $64.4 million to meet the court order.

'Hill Street Blues' gets aid from Dallas police

Associated Press

DALLAS — A chance meeting on a Colorado ski lift sparked a friendship that has provided the television series "Hill Street Blues" with some free material from the Dallas Police Department, actor Charles Haid says.

Haid, who portrays Andy Renko, a loud-mouthed, tobacco-chewing patrol officer, said he met Dallas police Sgt. David McCoy during the Peace Officers Downhill Race in 1980.

The actor dubbed McCoy "the officer my character would most like to be like."

Since the race, the Dallas Police Department has provided the show with phrases, stories and characters, Haid said this week in a telephone interview during a break from filming the show in Los Angeles.

"We've stolen a lot of strange expressions from them," he said. "We use some cases and just their general attitude ... Part of Renko's sense of humor and the way he talks funny comes from the guys in the Dallas department. And there's a few expletives that got by the censor direct from the DPD."

Haid has made an important contribution to the Dallas police, McCoy said. On Saturday, Haid and several other Hill Street regulars will be in town for the Dallas police rodeo. Haid has participated three times previously in the event, which raises money for the Shriners' Hospital for Burned Children in Galveston.

Convict feared sheriff, escaped from jail

Associated Press

TENNESSEE COLONY — Convicted kidnapper James Wesley Foote said he broke out of jail because he feared the Johnson County sheriff would kill him.

While free, he feared he had been allowed to escape so law officers could kill him for running, he said.

Foote, who escaped July 4 by climbing a fence at Johnson County Jail, is back in a Texas prison unit serving a life sentence for the kidnapping of Amy McNeil, 13, of Alvarado.

In his first interview since his recapture, Foote told the Dallas Times Herald he spent his short-lived freedom moving by night, and hiding and sleeping by day.

Foote, 34, said he remained free because people were not paying attention and his friends were willing to help him.

But he said his escape had been so easy that he began to fear the sheriff's office wanted him to flee so they could hunt him down and shoot him.

Johnson County Sheriff Eddy Boggs said, "That's totally false. Ain't no way I'm going to threaten a man or allow that to happen."

of a Colleyville woman when the escape occurred. He is now at the Coffield Unit.

He said he decided to climb the fence at Johnson County during an exercise period, because he feared he would be pinned with the Colleyville murder and possibly get the death sentence.

Foote said he ran through downtown Cleburne and across U.S. Highway 67 until he reached a rural area near State Highway 174. He stopped, he said, because he twisted his ankle while climbing the fence, and he needed to rest and hide.

He buried himself in a shallow trench in a plowed field and covered himself with straw, he said. And he said he could hear the helicopters and bloodhounds searching for him.

At nightfall, he started traveling again, he said. He hitched a ride with a teen-ager to Interstate 35, and a truck driver picked him up later the same day.

"My roughest ordeal was when the truck driver let me off at the Dairy Twin right there (in Alvarado where the McNiels live).

"I was afraid of going through Alvarado in Johnson County," Foote said. "I didn't want to be caught in Johnson County. I thought if I would have been caught in Johnson County I wouldn't be here today."

Although the sheriff and the McNiel family feared Foote would seek revenge — a wish he expressed after his conviction, Foote said he wasn't interested in bothering the family.

Foote made his way toward Blossom near the Oklahoma border, where his parents live.

He escaped with four quarters in his pocket, he said. But he was afraid to phone his parents for fear the lines might be tapped. So on July 8, he said, he called a friend whom he would not identify.

The friend took him to a hunting booth in the woods somewhere between Bonham and Paris, Foote said, and came back with a bag full of clothing and food and a note that said someone would pick Foote up July 10.
