Aggies hold out on NFL teams

Childress isn't likely to be in Oiler's camp

Associated Press
HOUSTON — Ray Childress, a former defensive end for Texas A&M and the Houston Oilers' first-round draft choice, likely will be a holdout when Oiler rookies report to training camp, his agent said Wednesday.

Childress, the third player chosen in the 1985 National Football League collegiate draft, remained unsigned along with Wisconsin cornerback Richard Johnson, also picked in the first round by the Oilers.

Edward Sewell, San Francisco, who represents Johnson, also said he is pessimistic about Johnson being in training camp Friday.

Six other Oiler draft choices are unsigned.

"We're a good bit apart right now," Childress' agent, Joe Courage, said following a telephone session Wednesday with Oilers General Manager Ladd Herzog.

"A problem here that people aren't understanding is that Ray has a development company that is earning him money right now. He's certainly not over a barrel with the Oilers as far as his livelihood is concerned."

Courage said Herzog's latest proposal involved more money, but both sides were still too far apart.

"I don't see how we can get everything worked out before Friday," Courage said. "Ray has got a definite figure in mind that he wants and it's obvious that the league is trying to hold these figures down."

Herzog said the Oilers have offered Childress a contract in line with that paid to last year's No. 1 draft choice, offensive lineman Dean Steinkuhler.

"We felt that we paid a lot to sign Dean Steinkuhler last year," Herzog said. "He was the second player chosen and Ray was the third player chosen this year. We feel that Dean and Ray are about equal and we are willing to compensate him accordingly."

Steinkuhler signed a four-year contract for a reported $2.6 million last season.

"If he (Childress) thinks he can earn more in the construction business, then maybe he shouldn't be looking at pro football," Herzog said.

Sewell said Johnson was aware that negotiations could be protracted.

"You have to be talking in order to sign a contract and we're not talking," Sewell said. "I'm sure at some point Ladd will want to talk about Richard's contract and until we find that he's changed his mind about wanting Richard's services, we won't consider any alternatives."

Ray Childress, a defensive end from Texas A&M, probably will be absent when Houston Oiler rookies report to training camp today.

Herzog also must resolve the contract dispute with running back Larry Moriarty, the team's leading rusher last season and a key figure in plans this season.

The only other unsigned Oiler veteran is defensive end Jesse Baker.

The Oilers' rookies are due to report to training camp at San Angelo, Texas, on Friday, followed by the veterans on Sunday.

Brandt: Darwin won't play for Dallas

Associated Press
THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Matt Darwin, an offensive lineman from Texas A&M, just might not be playing in the National Football League in 1985.

Gil Brandt, the Cowboys' personnel director, says as far as he's concerned, Darwin won't be with the club this season.

But Darwin's agent, Randy Hendricks, has called Brandt's stance "a power play" that won't work.

Hendricks said Brandt called him Tuesday, suspended negotiations, and said the Cowboys' offer of a $55,000 signing bonus for Darwin, a center-guard and fifth-round draft choice, was no longer available.

Brandt said the offer would be cut by $2,500 a day for each day Darwin stayed out of camp, Hendricks said.

Darwin and first-round draft choice Kevin Brooks, a defensive lineman from Michigan, are the only draft choices still unsigned. Matt Moran, an offensive guard from Stanford, has signed a series of one-year contracts, the club announced Tuesday.

Besides the bonus, the Cowboys' offer to Darwin included salaries of $70,000, $85,000 and $100,000 with an option.

"It's just a power play. Brandt told me he got our proposal and wouldn't pay a dime more than he already offered. He said he didn't see the point in beating around the bush and was ending the negotiations with Matt Darwin," Hendricks said.

"We're not going to knuckle under. We're not taking that deal," the agent said.

Brandt said he and Hendricks are so far apart that it's safe to say Darwin probably won't play for the Cowboys in 1985.

"As far as I'm concerned, he won't be here this year. The money they are talking about and what we're offering, I don't see how we can make a compromise," Brandt said.

Historically, a fifth-round draft choice usually is only borderline to make the cut.

"Somewhere along the line you have to compromise if you are drafted fifth," Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said. "You have to let the team make the call, and then the money will come."

If Darwin doesn't sign and the Cowboys don't trade his rights, he could sign with a USFL team for 1986 or put his name back into the 1986 draft. Brandt has said he will not trade the team's NFL rights to Darwin this season.

Darwin played every position on the offensive line while at Texas A&M, earning second team All-Southwest Conference honors at the center position in '83 and '84. The 6-foot-4, 265-pound lineman was expected to try the guard position with the Cowboys.

Slaney, Budd ready for rematch

Associated Press
LONDON — America's Mary Decker Slaney and her new coach, Luiz Oliveira, are playing down the significance of next Saturday's eagerly awaited clash with Britain's Zola Budd.

Slaney and Budd race over 3,000 meters at a Grand Prix meet at London's Crystal Palace stadium for the first time since their collision at the Los Angeles Olympic Games.

The now famous clash of legs in the 3,000 at the Los Angeles Coliseum left the medal hopes of both runners in tatters. Slaney lay writhing in agony on the side of the track, while Budd's concentration snapped and she finished disappointingly in seventh place amid boos from the pro-American crowd.

The bitter recriminations that followed made a rematch a thrilling prospect. But in the weekly British entertainment magazine, TV Times, published Wednesday, Slaney said: "I will be happy to run against Zola again but as far as I'm concerned she is now just another runner. The best situation is if it's just another race, if we both just happen to be there."

"When people look back at the 1984 Olympics, they will think about Carl Lewis, about Ed Moses and what happened to Mary. Of course it bothers me. I wanted to win but it isn't a great tragedy. It's behind me now."

Slaney is due to arrive in London on Thursday and has scheduled a luncheon press conference the same day at a downtown hotel.

Meanwhile, the mass-circulation Daily Mirror newspaper reported that Slaney and Budd would not meet in London until actually lining up on the track at Crystal Palace and that Budd's coach, Peter Labuschagne, had banned all prerace interviews with his protegee.
