Tutu says he'll defy restrictions against funerals

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Bishop Desmond Tutu quieted tensions at a funeral for black riot victims Thursday, persuading police to withdraw and angry mourners to be calm.

But the Nobel Peace Prize winner also pledged to defy funeral restrictions proclaimed by the white government. "I listen to God, not any other authority," he said. "I will continue to speak at all meetings, responsibly, as a minister."

Witnesses said Tutu personally imposed calm on an explosive situation in Tumahole, a riot-torn black township near Parys, 62 miles south of Johannesburg. At his urging, police withdrew from the path of the funeral procession, and he told the 1,000 mourners: "For goodness sake, let us stop doing things we're going to be ashamed of!"

Police said Tutu's remarks and the funeral did not violate the rules because Tumahole is not in an emergency area. It was held in a community hall.

Under the new restrictions, decreed under the state of emergency put into force July 21 in 36 towns and cities, only ordained ministers may speak and they may not mention politics.

Tutu said later that he would speak next Tuesday at the funeral of riot victims in Daveyton, a township near Johannesburg that is in an emergency area.

Manufacturers of AIDS drug say testing may begin in U.S.

PARIS — The producers of the chemical used in actor Rock Hudson's AIDS treatment say controlled clinical trials of the substance, HPA 23, may start soon in the United States. But they warn against excessive optimism.

One American AIDS victim who has undergone 10 weeks' treatment in Paris with HPA 23, Bob White, says it appears to have stabilized his case, though not those of some other Americans receiving the treatment.

White, leading efforts to allow the Americans to continue HPA 23 treatment back home, said his immune system remains "depleted" but "I have no longer any active AIDS virus, I have no current infection, I swim 1,000 yards a day and live in a fifth-floor walk-up."

He said, however, his treatment started within weeks of his AIDS diagnosis in February and "it only works on early-stage patients."

Among about 10 other Americans getting HPA 23, he said, "some are not quite as healthy and have had infections."

Film star Hudson was treated for six weeks last year with HPA 23, his Paris spokeswoman Yannou Collart said Wednesday. But when he returned here July 20 his condition was not considered suitable for further treatment. He was flown back to Los Angeles on Monday.

Dr. Yves Champey, vice president for medical and scientific development at the government-owned chemical company Rhone-Poulenc Sante, which makes HPA 23, said new trials will start in France "in the coming weeks" on up to 150 pa-

Astronauts probe energy emissions of massive stars

Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Challenger's astronauts zapped a satellite with an electron beam gun Thursday to duplicate in miniature the powerful energy fields of stars.

A 6½-foot free-flying satellite called the Plasma Diagnostics Package was hit with a jolt from the gun aboard the space shuttle. The astronauts said they could see flashes of light as the beam followed natural magnetic lines to the satellite.

Scientists on the ground called the demonstration "a fabulous success."

The experiment duplicated on a small scale the bolts of electron energy that astronomers have detected flashing in deep space between large stars many light years apart. It's hoped that data gathered by the PDP will help explain the phenomena.

NASA engineers evaluated the amount of rocket propellant left on board Challenger and studied the possibility of raising the shuttle's low orbit. Scientists hoped the orbit could be raised 8 to 10 miles to enhance data being gathered by a device studying the abundance of helium in the sun.

Challenger went into a lower-than-expected orbit when a rocket engine shut down during its launch Monday. The spacecraft is circling Earth at 195 miles, 46 miles lower than planned.

This degrades some of the data being gathered by science instruments and even a small increase in altitude would be an improvement, scientists said. A decision could be made as late as Friday.

Scientists in a ground control room at the Johnson Space Center were described by mission scientist Eugene Urban as "overwhelmed" by the quality of data gathered by experiments in Challenger's cabin.

A $60 million pointing device refuses to operate as designed and continued to confound engineers. Changes in computer software designed to correct a flaw in digital instructions within the pointing device have been tried, but an optical aiming element in the system still fails to work.

Other parts of the complex, German-made pointing device working, however, and program manager John Thomas said the device was a qualified success.

"Considering the totality of the system, it has performed as we expected," said Thomas. He said the fine-tuned aiming information from an adjacent telescope, the pointing device was able to accurately track targets on the sun.

An infrared spectrum camera telescope was operated for the first time Wednesday, and Urban said collected new readings about the heat energy of distant stars.
