Texas civil rights leader dies at 83

Associated Press

DALLAS — Juanita Jewel Craft, described by one associate as a "living legend" for the civil rights movement in Texas, has died at the age of 83.

Craft died Tuesday at a local hospital after being in failing health in recent months.

The granddaughter of a slave, she helped found 180 chapters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and spearheaded desegregation of public facilities and schools.

"Don't call me a color," she once said. "Call me a human being."

The first black woman elected to the Dallas City Council, she served two terms in that post while continuing to fight city hall over what she considered inequities.

Craft became active in the civil rights movement in 1927 when she was barred from voting in the Democratic primary. She sued and won, eventually becoming the first black woman in Texas to vote absentee in the party primary.

Craft joined the NAACP in 1935 and was elected to its national board six years later. She traveled throughout the Southwest, helping organize NAACP chapters.

In 1955, she and her NAACP youth group picketed the State Fair of Texas, which only admitted blacks one day a year on "Negro Day." After the fair, Craft also led pickets at downtown Dallas movie theaters and lunch counters.

Though she had no children of her own from her two marriages, she was a founder of the Dallas Youth Council.

"I have no natural children," she said in 1981. "I have adopted the world."

In recent years she expressed disappointment with the attitudes of young people toward the battles she had launched.

"I'm disappointed that we've opened the schools, yet those people who got their higher education are doing little for the community," she said in one interview.

"They're just working for themselves. These people who have nice homes, they just stay in those nice homes and do little for the community. I don't understand it."

She was active in politics most of her adult life and was 73 when she was elected to her first term on the city council in 1975.

"My philosophy is that politics controls the air you breathe," she once said.

Craft was born in Round Rock and was graduated from Prairie View A&M University in 1921. When she came to Dallas in 1925, she worked as a hotel maid.

In 1968, she was awarded the city's highest honor for civic work, the Linz Award.

W.B. Lancaster, a Texas A&M employee for the past 30 years, is retiring at the end of the month. A reception in his honor will be held Aug. 23, from 9:30 a.m.-11:30 a.m. in 145 MSC. Lancaster has worked as A&M payroll services manager for the past 15 years. Before that, he worked as business manager for the Memorial Student Center.

Lancaster, a resident of College Station all his life, graduated from A&M Consolidated High School in 1945 and from A&M in 1949. Texas A&M has established a scholarship in memory of L.F. Peterson of Fort Worth, a former member of the A&M Board of Regents, with a gift from attorney Dee J. Kelly, also of Fort Worth.

The L.F. Peterson Memorial Scholarship for students in the Department of Plant Pathology and Microbiology honors the former regent who served on the A&M Board of Regents from 1963 to 1975 and was its chairman from 1973-75. Peterson died July 1 in Fort Worth at the age of 71.

Peterson received a degree in petroleum engineering from A&M in 1936, worked as an independent oil operator and petroleum engineering consultant throughout the United States and the world after beginning his professional career as a roustabout for Standard Oil and Gas Co. following his graduation.

Peterson served as president of the A&M Association of Former Students in 1963 and was named recipient of the Distinguished Alumni Award in 1976.

Richard S. Reynolds, assistant director of the Memorial Student Center, has been appointed regional coordinator for the South Central region of the National Association for Campus Activities.

NACA, headquartered in South Carolina, is the largest and most comprehensive educational, trade and professional service association in campus activities. Association membership is composed of more than 1,000 college and university members and nearly 500 associated firms that are involved with contemporary entertainment, the performing and fine arts, recreation, and travel and leisure services.

Dr. H. Grant Vest, head of the horticultural sciences department at A&M, has been elected a Fellow of the American Society for Horticultural Sciences.

Vest received the award, the association's highest honor, at ASHS's annual meeting Aug. 1 at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Vest was appointed head of the A&M horticulture department in 1983 after having served as head of the department at Oklahoma State University and as an associate professor of horticulture at Michigan State University.

Baylor prof says protein may play role in male infertility

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A researcher at Baylor College of Medicine said he has discovered a protein that may play a role in one type of infertility in men.

Steven D. Holmes, an assistant professor of urology at Baylor, identified a protein secreted by cells in the testes of the male rat that may stimulate development of germs in sperm cells, a process called spermatogenesis.

Holmes also is doing studies to develop a test for the amount of this protein in males.

"A lack of this protein, called sertoli cell secreted growth factor, may be responsible for some cases of infertility in men," Holmes said in a statement issued by Baylor.

His findings were reported this week at a meeting in Los Angeles of the International Society of Developmental Biologists.

Statistics show the 15 percent of American couples are infertile. The male is a factor in about half of the cases.

One of the causes of male infertility is an arrested development of sperm in the blood-testes barrier, a structure in the testes which protects germ cells from blood products such as antibodies, Holmes said.

The blood-testes barrier is formed by sertoli cells — described as the "nurse" cells, which provide nourishment for developing germ cells.

Part of the nourishment might be the growth factor — Holmes found secreted by sertoli cells. Holmes said a lack of this growth factor may cause an arrested sperm cell development.

The development of sperm begins in the large mass of narrow, coiled tubules inside each testis.
