Congressmen garner big PAC contributions

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Five of Texas' six freshmen Republican congressmen drew substantial contributions — totalling between $32,550 and $77,350 — from special-interest political action committees, according to their latest campaign finance reports.

The reports cover the first six months of 1985.

Mac Sweeney of Wharton, who was working overtime to mop up a large campaign debt, attracted the most individual and PAC contributions in the delegation. He received total donations of $220,265 with $77,350 coming from PACs.

Beau Boulter of Amarillo received $47,100 in PAC contributions. Tom DeLay of Sugar Land received $39,900; Richard Arney of Denton, $34,650; and Larry Combest of Lubbock, $32,550.

Joe Barton of Ennis received only $6,000 from PACs. He was the only one of the six not to get a seat on a major committee and serves on Interior, Science and Technology.

Sweeney is on Armed Services; Boulter on Budget; DeLay on Public Works and Government Operations; Arney on Education and Labor and Government Operations; and Combest on Agriculture.

Boulter had the biggest campaign debt, about $42,600.

Democrat Marvin Leath of Marlin won a seat on the powerful Budget Committee, and Albert Bustamante of San Antonio, the only new Democrat in the delegation, was appointed to Armed Services, but their reports were not available Thursday at the House records office.
