W. Morgan Robnett, a Dallas law officer for 23 years, will assume duties as head of the Law Enforcement and Security Training Division of the Texas Engineering Extension Service (TEES) Sept. 1.

Robnett has been an associate training specialist with the division since February and a guest instructor for the agency since 1975. He is a 20-year veteran of the Dallas Police Department where he served as a motorcycle sergeant until 1982. From 1982 until 1985 he served as assistant chief deputy of the Dallas County Sheriff's Department.

Robnett earned a criminal justice degree from Sam Houston State University in 1977 and master's degree in public administration from Southern Methodist University in 1980.

A&M student clubs in agricultural engineering and mechanized agriculture are among the major winners in a national competition recently sponsored by the Farm and Industrial Equipment Institute.

A&M's Mechanized Agriculture Club was the overall winner in competition among similar collegiate groups throughout the nation, and the student branch of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers took first runner-up honors in the event for clubs with more than 35 members.

In addition, Leslie Leitz, a junior agricultural engineering major, was elected second vice president of ASAE's National Council of Student Branches.

The annual competition is sponsored by FIEI, a major trade association for manufacturers of agricultural and light industrial machinery in North America. The institute annually presents awards to student branches with the most outstanding record of activities and achievements in the previous year.

Justice Department gives OK to election

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department said Wednesday it found nothing wrong with the way Texas officials set the date of a special congressional election that was held Aug. 3.

The election, held among eight candidates — six Democrats, one independent and one Republican — on June 29 and narrowed down to a two-man runoff on Aug. 3, was considered a test of Republican strength in East Texas, a long-time Democratic stronghold.

Democrat Jim Chapman won by a 51 percent to 49 percent margin over Republican Edd Hargett.

Texas officials and the department were at a standoff over the matter for weeks, since late June when the department insisted the date of the hotly contested race had to be approved under the Voting Rights Act.

Under that law, southern states must have changes in their election laws checked by the Justice Department for possible discrimination against minorities.

The state submitted the election schedule under protest a week ago, and the department approved it Wednesday afternoon, said spokesman John Wilson.

"It was found not to be discriminatory," he said.

The state had argued that the state election code which sets out how special election dates are set are set had already been approved.

A San Antonio federal court had agreed with the department. Last Wednesday, after U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron White's refused, without comment, to hear the state's appeal, the state gave in.

that many physical problems can be attributed to VDTs.

"Most of the studies tend to show that VDT operators suffer a higher rate of visual and musculo-skeletal problems than employees who work in the same offices but do not use VDTs," Eisen said.

A representative of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, an opponent of VDT legislation, said opponents say many of the requests are ridiculous because no concrete proof exists showing VDTs and the current equipment to be harmful.

In a telephone interview, George Cashau, technical research director for the ANPA, said many opponents agree that musculo-skeletal problems, such as headaches and back pains, can arise from a poor work environment, but they say none of the problems can be linked to VDTs. He said the updating of some equipment, such as adjustable chairs and tables, might solve the problems with body aches, but longer rest breaks, free eye exams and VDT legislation are unjustified.
