JAL crash survivor says child urged her to keep living

Associated Press
 TOKYO — A woman who survived the Japan Air Lines crash in which 520 people perished, said her 8-year-old daughter shouted at her, urging her to stay awake and live through the long night in the wreckage.
 Hiroko Yoshizaki, 35, said that after the crash she was on the edge of consciousness because of pain when her daughter, Mikiko, shouted: "Don't go to sleep mother! Stay awake or you'll die! I'm hungry mother!"
 Yoshizaki gave the account from a hospital bed to her mother, Matsue Hara, who provided it to The Associated Press on Tuesday in a telephone interview.
 Yoshizaki and Mikiko were among the four survivors of the Aug. 12 crash that was the worst single-plane disaster in aviation history. Yoshizaki's husband and their other two children died in the crash.
 The government had not pinpointed the cause of the crash, and workers were still on the mountain 70 miles northwest of Tokyo recovering bodies and debris.
 Mrs. Yoshizaki's account of what happened aboard the jetliner basically matched those of two other survivors, off-duty stewardess Yumi Ochiai, 26, and 12-year-old Keiko Kawakami.

Sikhs

 In earlier attacks Tuesday, gunmen believed to be Sikh militants attacked the home of Gurdial Saini, the Congress Party president, killing Dev Dutt Khullar, a 62-year-old Congress Party member and Hindu village leader.
 Saini was seriously wounded in the attack and was listed in stable condition in Jullundur hospital. Sikh party worker Gurbachan Singh was also wounded in the leg.
 The Punjab accord was signed in New Delhi July 24. The settlement was hailed by Gandhi as a solution to the long campaign by the Sikhs for some autonomy in Punjab. But many Sikhs rejected the accord.
 They objected to it because Gandhi rejected an amnesty for nearly 5,000 Sikh army mutineers and the release of thousands of imprisoned youths.
 Commenting on the violence, the prime minister said: "Anti-national forces are at work to frustrate forces of political reconciliation in Punjab. We must fight these forces unitedly."
 After the attack on the Congressmen, Jullundur was sealed off and roadblocks were set up in the state's major industrial city, 192 miles northwest of New Delhi and 48 miles southeast of the Sikh holy city of Amritsar.
 "A man of peace has fallen to the bullets of assassins," Gandhi said in a condolence message. "He has left a void which is difficult to fill."
 The government had provided around-the-clock bodyguards to Longowal after he signed the accord. Officials had feared he would be assassinated by those who rejected the accord.
 "If others don't approve of it, let them not," Longowal said after the signing. "The accord is in the favor of the Panth (Sikh cause) and the whole of Punjab," he said.
