increase has changed that plan. He says he may finish his mechanical engineering degree in December and give up the other degree.

He says if he were not going to graduate, he would transfer to another university. However, he says he is aware that transferring is not a perfect solution, since many universities limit the number of credits that can be transferred.

Many international students, whether they can cope with it or not, feel strongly against the tuition increase.

"If they need to increase, I'm sure they have their reasons," Sophia Iliadou, president of the Hellenic Students' Association, says. "But they should inform people before they come here."

"It's difficult for people who are in the middle of their program, or close to graduation," she says. "They've already planned their budget. You estimate the inflation, but not the triple increase. It's better to start from the freshmen."

Ahuya Camillus, former president of the Kenyan Students Association, said, "That's a terrible jump. Everyone is hard hit."

Some students who receive scholarships from their countries predict there may be fewer students coming to this campus from those countries.

Camillus says the majority of Kenyan students at A&M are on government scholarships, so the government is going to pay more to support the students here.

"(In the future) the number of students that come here may decline because the government might not be able to send many students," Camillus says.

Arik Sadeh, president of the Israeli Club, says, "When students in Israel consider where to go abroad to study, they consider the standard of living, tuition and the academic standard."

Sadeh, a graduate student in agricultural economics, says he feels the increase in non-resident tuition would keep some Israeli students from coming to this campus.

Iliadou agreed.

"If I'm going to pay this much, I might as well go to universities on the west coast or go north," she says. "A&M is a good university, but the location is isolated."

However, Iliadou sees one good result of the tuition increase.

"Everyone is trying hard to get scholarships, either from the department, or from his country," Iliadou said. "One good side of the tuition increase is it makes people try harder, because they have to maintain good academic records."

"But then," she said, "foreign students try hard anyway."

Get to the answers faster. With the TI-55-II.

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions - more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations - like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolic - at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.

Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

Get to the answers faster. Let a TI-55-II show you how.
