Whitmire discusses personal life

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Four years ago, Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire refused to talk about her personal life, but she says she's willing to discuss her romance, marriage and lifestyle since she's proven she can handle her job.

During the past few months, Whitmire, who is seeking her third term as mayor of the nation's fourth largest city, has changed her hairstyle from a "Tootsie" look of soft curls to a shorter, straighter and blonder look.

She says that she didn't change her hairstyle for the upcoming election, but after 4½ years of the "Tootsie" look, it was time for a change.

Whitmire still wears business suits to work every day — "just like a man would always wear a suit to the office" — and has a strong will.

She said she vowed always to look "businesslike, professional and mayoral and all those things" because as a young woman in an elected position, she said it was important to be taken seriously.

"Now, four years later, I don't think anybody has any doubt as to whether I can do the job," she says. "And so I don't think that (always looking the part) is any longer necessary."

Whitmire said questions about her love life don't bother her.

"I don't resent it because I'd like to know about the romances of other people in high places," she says.

Attending functions alone was something Whitmire had to get used to when her husband died nine years ago following a lengthy illness.

Of marriage she says, "I certainly haven't ruled it out but I haven't set that as a specific goal either."

"I don't know" about children, the mayor says. "I'm getting pretty old, so I just don't have any specific made-up plans. That's something I have missed. Whether I'll ever have any of my own is something I don't know."

Whitmire says she doesn't understand why she's considered humorless but admits, "I'm not one of the people who grabs the floor at a party."

In Advance Faculty Senate meets to consider changes

By MARYBETH ROHSNER

A proposal for a B.S. degree plan in genetics is one of the issues to be discussed at the Faculty Senate meeting at 3:15 today in 701 Rudder Tower.

Following a guest presentation by Texas A&M President Frank Vandiver, the Senate is scheduled to hear recommendations from the Senate's University Curriculum Committee.

Also, the Senate will vote on the addition of and changes in undergraduate courses.

The Faculty Senate Graduate Council also will present recommendations on additions, withdrawals and changes in graduate courses.

The scheduled presentation from the Graduate Council concerning waiving the final oral examination for students seeking a M.B.A. degree has been withdrawn from the agenda.

Adoption of a core curriculum will not be discussed at today's meeting, Senate Speaker Dr. Jaan Laane said Wednesday that the core curriculum issue is being researched by a subcommittee of the Senate's Academic Affairs Committee.

"We expect that something will come forward from the Academic Affairs Committee later," Laane said. "But I'm not able to give the exact date. It will probably be at the November meeting."

The meeting, which is open to the public, should conclude at 6 p.m.

MSC Council to discuss program evaluation

By MEG CADIGAN
Staff Writer

A new program approval process will be discussed tonight at the third regular meeting of the 36th Memorial Student Center Council.

Denis Davis, MSC Council president, said the new process will ensure that programs are carefully evaluated before they are carried out.

The budget and the marketing plan are two criteria on which the programs are to be evaluated, she said.

During the meeting, the 13 MSC Standing Committees will be enacted, Davis said.

The committees are made up of 18 to 24 MSC committee chairmen and administrators and cover a wide number of areas such as Budget Review, Building Operations and various program review committees.

The Standing Committees are a primary resource for the MSC Council, because they are made up of committee chairmen.

These chairmen are closest to the progress and problems of the MSC, Davis said.

"These committees are where the detailed deliberation of the Council takes place," Davis said.

"This leaves the Council free to set the medium to long range goals of the organization," she added.

Davis said the Council also will discuss MSC computer needs and appoint a committee to work out the immediate lack of computer time and space and to plan for future computer needs.

Also, assignments of MSC committee advisers will be completed and a new organizational chart will be approved.
