OPAS to open season with live performance by St. Louis Symphony

By TRENT LEOPOLD
Senior Staff Writer

Texas A&M's Opera and Performing Arts Society (OPAS) opens its 13th season at tonight at 8 in Rudder Auditorium with a performance by the 101-member Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Leonard Slatkin will be conducting the second-oldest American symphony orchestra. Only the New York Philharmonic predates it.

The orchestra has received two Grammy awards for its recording of Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5. The awards were for the best orchestral recording and best engineered classical album of 1985.

Slatkin, who began his conducting career with the orchestra in 1968, is one of the few American-born and American-trained musicians to become music director of a major symphony orchestra. He was born in Los Angeles and was Jean Morel's student at the Juilliard School of Music.

He began studying violin at age 3, piano at 11, composition at 14 and viola at age 15. He holds honorary degrees from Washington University, the University of Missouri-St. Louis, St. Louis Conservatory of Music and Schools for the Arts and St. Louis University.

A recent Sunday New York Times magazine article stated: "Under the direction of Slatkin, the Saint Louis Symphony has turned into an orchestra now compared by some with the nation's finest."

And Time magazine critic Michael Walsh recently ranked the Saint Louis Symphony among the two best American symphony orchestras.

Slatkin is known for his imaginative programming and audience rapport. His repertoire is extensive.

"Balanced programming is one of the most important elements of success," Slatkin says.

Some tickets for tonight's performance were still available late Wednesday. They can be purchased at the Memorial Student Center Box Office.

Connally models for newspaper ad

Associated Press

AUSTIN — If Texans think they recognize that silver-haired man wearing an eye patch and a stern look in the Hathaway shirt-and-tie advertisement, they're right.

He's former governor and one-time presidential hopeful John Connally.

"Every man has his own management style," says the ad that ran in a men's fashion supplement to the New York Times Magazine last Sunday. "Take John Connally. Dynamic, determined, a national presence in law, government and business."

Connally, who posed with hands determinedly on hips, is the latest celebrity to lend his baron-of-the-boardroom appeal to Hathaway's two-year-old ad campaign.

Other ads have featured hotelier Bill Marriott, cable TV magnate Ted Turner, "Megatrends" author John Naisbitt, wine aficionado Michael Mondavi and jacuzzi inventor Roy Jacuzzi.

"The campaign is based not only on celebrity, but people whose face and-or name is widely recognized," said Pete Penizotto, vice president of Chester Gore-Eric Mower and Associates, the New York advertising agency representing Hathaway.

But what is the deal with that black patch perched roguishly over Connally's right eye?

Penizotto said that the patch has "long been identified with Hathaway." The patch was the brainchild of advertising innovator David Ogilvy, who dreamed it up for a Hathaway ad in the early 1950s.

"John Connally, the man in the Hathaway shirt," proclaims the headline of the ad.

The advertisement was shot last October in the New York studio of fashion photographer Gideon Lewin. Connally was "a very, very good model," Penizotto said. "Very cordial."

Hairstyle and make-up artists did not labor over the famous Connally face because "he looked fine," Penizotto added.

"Part of the campaign is we're dealing with real people here," he said. In advertising talk, that means nobody fluffed or sprayed Connally's hair or slyly added a touch of rouge or mascara.

Penizotto would not say how much Connally was paid. But he did say Connally kept the red-striped shirt and tie he wore in the ad.

Wendy Gramm recommended for FTC chairmanship

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Wendy Gramm, wife of Sen. Phil Gramm, says she is not pushing for the job but will let the Reagan administration consider her for chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, where she is director of the bureau of economics.

FTC Chairman James C. Miller III has recommended Mrs. Gramm, as well as the two other FTC directors, to the White House as potential successors, according to Gramm, R-Texas, and a recent report in the Washington Post.

Miller was nominated to succeed David Stockman as director of the Office of Management and Budget and is still awaiting Senate confirmation hearings, so the naming of his successor at FTC is probably several weeks away.

The FTC oversees advertising and marketing for fraud and unfair trade practices.

"I will do basically what people feel would be the best, if that means staying in the bureau of economics or another position," Mrs. Gramm said in a telephone interview this week.

If Mrs. Gramm receives the job, Gramm would be the second member of the Senate whose wife heads an executive branch agency. Elizabeth Dole, wife of Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, is secretary of transportation.

Mrs. Gramm said she has talked to the White House in general about the job.

"I've visited there," she said. "I don't know to what extent I'm being considered. At this point, I haven't ruled out anything."

Gramm, as a Democrat, was a sponsor of President Reagan's economic programs in the House. He switched parties in 1983 and won the Senate seat last year.

Mrs. Gramm, 40, like her husband, has a Ph.D. in economics. On her office wall is a picture of herself and Gramm with Reagan in the Oval Office. Reagan inscribed the picture to Mrs. Gramm with the words, "to my favorite economist."

White House spokesman Dale Petroskey would not comment about the selection process or Miller's recommendations.

"We have a long-standing policy of not talking about who's pushing whom," he said. "It only tends to get us in trouble."

Miller, who has been declining interviews since his nomination for OMB director, could not be reached for comment.
