Reagan: fairness at heart of tax plan

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — President Reagan returned to Florida on Thursday determined to drum up interest in a tax bill congressional leaders say just isn't a top-priority among constituents more concerned about the trade deficit or South Africa.

Using his own age and inevitable retirement to identify himself with his elderly audience, the 74-year-old, second-term president pressed his campaign against "useless tax dodges" and called charges his tax plan would hurt the middle class "balderdash."

Addressing about 2,600 senior citizens brought together by a national lobby financed largely by corporations that support the administration's tax bill, Reagan said he opposes the present system because it isn't fair.

"I've been preaching the merits of free enterprise for years," said Reagan, whose 1981 tax cut was attacked for providing the nation's wealthiest taxpayers with the greatest benefits. "Business people provide jobs and create wealth. I have nothing against them; on the contrary, they have my heartfelt admiration."

"What I am against is a tax system that allows some to take perfectly legal deductions that by any standard of fairness are an outrage. Every year many Americans pay more in federal income taxes than the giant corporations they work for."

tion of my political life."

"My friends, in this regard you and I have much in common," Reagan told the "senior citizens forum on tax reform."

"We've lived out a great part of our lives," he said, and now look to the future hoping new generations will enjoy the freedom and opportunity long cherished by Americans.

The forum was organized by Americans for Tax Reform, a coalition of business and community groups set up to lobby for the tax bill. It is financed largely by its corporate sponsors, including Dart and Kraft.

After campaigning almost exclusively for his tax proposal for much of the summer, Reagan's biggest obstacle is in keeping it high enough on the congressional agenda to win action by both the House and Senate before the end of the year.

Leading members of both parties say the plan has captured little attention among voters.

Survey says teachers feel views are ignored

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A majority of teachers feel their views aren't being sought in shaping education reforms sweeping the country, and more than one in four say they are likely to quit the classroom within five years, according to a poll released Thursday.

"Clearly, many teachers feel left out of the wave of reform," said Louis Harris, who conducted the second annual "Metropolitan Life Survey of The American Teacher."

Teachers are as opposed as ever to merit pay, according to the latest survey. And most also are leery of allowing school districts to hire non-certified persons as teachers — a growing practice in New York City, Los Angeles, New Jersey and elsewhere.

Low salaries and poor working conditions were cited by nearly two-thirds of the 27 percent of teachers who said that they were "very likely" or "somewhat likely" to leave the profession in five years.

More than half of all teachers surveyed said they had seriously considered leaving the profession for some other occupation. But those who have stayed on said they did so mainly because of their love of teaching.

"Teachers are telling the American public that education is headed for deep trouble unless teaching is treated as a true profession," said Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the National Education Association.

Futrell and Albert Shanker, head of the rival teacher union, the American Federation of Teachers, were at a news conference at which the findings were released.

The survey findings were particularly ominous because federal studies now estimate that by 1992 the nation will have 34 percent fewer teachers than are needed.

The teachers gave mixed grades to the moves toward educational reform over the past several years, including efforts in some states to improve curriculum, increase salaries and require students and teachers to pass standardized tests.

Most significantly, said Harris at a news conference, nearly two-thirds — 63 percent — felt their views were not sought in shaping educational reform. A nearly equal proportion, 64 percent, said reforms reflect the views of their administrators.
