Cancer plan blasted for omitting East Texas

Associated Press

AUSTIN — The Texas Cancer Council began a $7 million effort Tuesday to find the extent of cancer risks in Texas, but some members protested that East Texas was being slighted.

Council member Dr. Donald C. Spencer, an Austin physician, and former state Sen. Don Adams, vice chairman of the council, disagreed with a Texas Department of Health plan that would not require hospitals with fewer than 100 beds to report cancer cases.

Hospitals required to make reports would detail the circumstances of each cancer case. For each report filed the hospital would receive $6.

Adams said most of the hospitals in East Texas have fewer than 100 beds.

Spencer said East Texas has the highest incidence of cancer in the state.

Dr. Robert Bernstein, state health commissioner, said when the 1985 Legislature cut the appropriation from $11.7 million to $7 million for the next two years, the Department of Health was forced to ask for cancer reports only from hospitals with more than 100 beds in high priority areas for the Texas Cancer Registry.

Bernstein said his department believed these reports would represent about 90 percent of the cancer cases in Texas since they would include the Dallas-Fort Worth, Beaumont-Port Arthur and Houston areas.

State Sen. Chet Brooks, a member of the council from Pasadena, said he was convinced the 1987 Legislature would allocate more money for the cancer registry if the current efforts are successful.
