Texas artist to exhibit Indian works

Associated Press

SAN ANGELO — Sculptor Lincoln Fox has returned to his hometown bearing southwestern Indian bronzes for a special exhibit.

The bronzes, on view at Iman Galleries, depict Indians catching and dancing, carrying game or wearing ceremonial headdresses. The Indian men are powerful, with rippling muscles. They seem imbued with mystical qualities.

The women are different. Their forms are stylized with soft lines and indistinct shapes. Children rest in their arms or tug on their skirts. "Women need to be handled differently from men," Fox said. "Another reason is that I sometimes work with stone. I have that in the back of my mind. Women lend themselves to that."

Fox, 43, has exhibited works in museums and galleries around the nation, including the Smithsonian in Washington, D.C., the National Academy of Western Art at the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, and the Armand Hammer Invitational Exhibition at the United World College in Albuquerque, N.M.

The works will be on exhibit here through Oct. 1.

In 1984, Fox won the Medal of Honor at the Grand National Exhibition in New York City. He won over 97 other invited entries at the nation's largest sculpture exhibit.

Buyers can expect to dig deep into their wallets for the sculptures. They range from $150 for a dog amulet to $82,500 for a bronze titled "Shaman With a Bear Skull."

The exhibit also includes print portraits of Indian women and cast paper, which is a deeply embossed impression on handmade paper.

Fox said he became interested in Indians and the outdoors when he was a child growing up in San Angelo.

"Indians understood how things interrelated," he said. "If they were gathering wild plants, they left a few for the next season."

One influence was his best friend's grandfather.

"He loved kids and the outdoors," he said. "He taught us to talk to the fish and how to catch them. He taught us to make bows and arrows."

LUFKIN — Since giving the brush-off to working for other people, Sandra and Jim Dyke have drawn one conclusion about Lufkin: every house has wasp nests.

It is the kind of thing one notices when one spends hours perched atop a ladder balancing a full can of paint.

The Dykes should know. They are a husband and wife team who work together painting just about anything — interiors, exteriors, furniture, and industrial projects. They launched their local business, called Jim and Sandra Dyke Paint Contractors, last spring after moving here from Oklahoma.

A can of wasp spray is standard issue for them now, but weapons don't necessarily win the war. Confronted with 10 wasps flying in battle formation recently, Jim Dyke beat a hasty retreat. He dropped his can of poison spray and it rolled off the steep roof.

Reduced to squirting them with Windex, he kept edging backwards. He said he would have fallen off the

Forgery conviction maintained by court

Associated Press

AUSTIN — A state appeals court Wednesday upheld the forgery conviction of Barr McClellan, a former Austin lawyer and ex-husband of former Mayor Carole McClellan Rylander.

McClellan was assessed a 10-year sentence, which was probated, after a jury found that he had passed a deed of trust as true "when no such original existed."

McClellan appealed on 16 points of alleged error, including the contention he could not receive a fair trial before any judge in Travis County.

He filed a pre-trial motion challenging all the judges' participation in the case, "claiming legal and political opposition existed against him," according to the 3rd Court of Appeals.

A hearing was held before Judge Herman Jones, and McClellan testified that members of his law firm —

Clark, Thomas — had told him they were not going to let him succeed in practice in Travis County.

After that, according to court records, McClellan said he had lost all but three of 178 contested matters before Travis County judges, "leading him to believe that he could not receive a fair trial in the county before any of the judges."

Jones overruled the motion, and Justice Quentin Keith, writing for the 3rd Court of Appeals said:

"The broadness of the challenge and the vagueness of the evidence of bias led Judge Jones to overrule the motion to recuse, and our review of the record does not lead us to the conviction that there was an abuse of discretion. For aught that appears in the record, appellant's clients should have lost 175 of the 178 cases he tried; at least, no evidence was introduced showing that any appellate court had ever reversed a single adverse decision."

Husband, wife painting team enjoy work despite wasps

Associated Press

LUFKIN — Since giving the brush-off to working for other people, Sandra and Jim Dyke have drawn one conclusion about Lufkin: every house has wasp nests.

It is the kind of thing one notices when one spends hours perched atop a ladder balancing a full can of paint.

The Dykes should know. They are a husband and wife team who work together painting just about anything — interiors, exteriors, furniture, and industrial projects. They launched their local business, called Jim and Sandra Dyke Paint Contractors, last spring after moving here from Oklahoma.

A can of wasp spray is standard issue for them now, but weapons don't necessarily win the war. Confronted with 10 wasps flying in battle formation recently, Jim Dyke beat a hasty retreat. He dropped his can of poison spray and it rolled off the steep roof.

Reduced to squirting them with Windex, he kept edging backwards. He said he would have fallen off the roof if he hadn't backed into the chimney.

Such is the life of a painter. It is a life they say they enjoy very much. "We enjoy working together and we enjoy working outdoors," Mrs. Dyke said.

Their paint-splattered white clothes could almost serve as a scrapbook with different colors representing different jobs. Each new undertaking offers the variety that is another part of what they enjoy about their chosen vocation.

Some days are quiet and some are more lively.

"It's very peaceful, painting," Mrs. Dyke said. "Especially when you're painting off to yourself. Usually he works off on one side and I'm on the other. We can work all day and only see each other at break and lunch."

To liven up things, they sometimes listen to the radio and Mrs. Dyke will dance on her ladder. Dyke said he doesn't dance on his ladder because, "I'm scared I'll fall."

What he enjoys most is the feeling of accomplishment when a job is going well. Always conscious that time is money, he said that he is happiest when they make good time.

They made the decision to become self-employed because it allows them to make more money per job. The drawback is that jobs aren't guaranteed. Mrs. Dyke said, "Nothing is ever sure . . . You don't have that steady income."

All in all, though, they still prefer to be their own bosses.

"I think we have a better family life. On a rainy day we can be with our daughters. We don't have to worry about losing our jobs if an aunt dies and we want to go to her funeral," Mrs. Dyke said.

Working together calls for mutual respect.

"I don't think we would get along if he tried to be my boss or I tried to be his," she said.

If a difference of opinion does arise, they maintain professionalism and keep it to themselves. "Arguing on the job," Dyke said, "that's something you don't do."
