UAW strike?

Rejuvenated Chrysler Corp. facing problems with union

Associated Press

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. — Since its spectacular recovery from near-bankruptcy, Chrysler Corp. has portrayed itself as leaner and quicker than other automakers, better able to react to the fickle tastes of the motoring public.

The No. 3 domestic carmaker, which employed 168,000 people in the early 1970s compared with U.S. employment of about 95,000 today, owes much of its leanness to the computerization and automation that swept the industry at the same time the company was pulling its feet from the grave.

But Chrysler got lean in another big way during its uncertain years, 1977 to 1983 — by tossing factories overboard.

Two of its nine U.S. car and truck assembly plants were permanently closed. Perhaps more significant, Chrysler shut down 14 of its 39 automotive parts plants.

The matter could become a strike issue when the UAW contract, covering nearly 70,000 U.S. blue-collar workers, expires Oct. 15, the union said.

Mark Stepp, the union's chief bargainer, said Chrysler now makes 30 percent of the parts for the cars it sells; the rest are made by other companies in the United States and abroad.

The federal government required cutbacks before bailing out Chrysler during the dark days,

The United Auto Workers, bargaining with a healthy Chrysler for the first time in nearly a decade, has skinned back enough and the union will stand for no more.

— United Auto Workers and they helped the company straighten its balance sheet, Stepp said.

But he said company Chairman Lee Iacocca has made the union's problem worse by continuing to seek outside suppliers and by using Chrysler profits to finance research and development by outside companies.

Chrysler hasn't responded to Stepp about the subcontracting of parts work, known as outsourcing.

However, the company confirmed that Chrysler's chief negotiator, Thomas Miner, would sit on the company's outsourcing subcommittee, across the table from Stepp.

It is unusual for the top negotiators to sit on the various subcommittees that bargain the national contract in piecemeal fashion. But Stepp said last week the move reflected "a considerable amount of anger . . . among our members as a result of this corporation's outsourcing activities."

Chrysler has been vocal on its targeted major issue — work rules and job classifications.

The company wants to shed the strict system of rules prohibiting workers from doing jobs aside for other workers. Chrysler complains it is saddled with more than 100 job classifications in its assembly plants and more than 500 throughout the corporation.

Despite the plant closings, Chrysler retains some of the oldest brick and mortar in the auto industry.

Chrysler wants to make those old factories more efficient by reducing the number of job classes to eight or fewer.

The Japanese usually have two or three job classes in their plants, allowing for a smaller workforce with employees who can do a variety of jobs. Stepp has said that reducing the number of job classifications at Chrysler would allow the company to eliminate thousands of jobs.

Pay is believed to be a lesser issue. Chrysler workers, during the bad years, received more than $1 an hour less than their counterparts at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

Spielberg aiding search for real-life extraterrestrials

Associated Press

HARVARD, Mass. — With the touch of a lever, "E.T." director Steven Spielberg on Sunday inaugurated a search for real-life extraterrestrials, switching on a giant antenna that astronomers hope will detect radio signals sent from outer space.

"This marks the beginning of a really powerful search that has a decent chance of finding something," said Paul Horowitz, a Harvard University professor who designed the 84-foot communications dish, part of the most powerful radio-scanning system ever used to hunt for aliens.

The dish, capable of scanning 8.4 million radio channels, marks an escalation of such efforts by The Planetary Society, which scans the skies for signs of life from its Oak Ridge Observatory in Harvard, a small town northwest of Boston.

Since 1983, the space-watching group had been searching with a simpler scanner, which picked up only 180,000 radio channels.

The new antenna, known as Project Meta, was built with the help of a $100,000 grant from Spielberg, the science fiction filmmaker whose credits include "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" and "E.T.," which featured a lovable alien.

Spielberg whisked into Harvard just long enough to flip on the antenna with the help of his infant son, Max. The communications dish hummed as it rotated skyward.

"It's the most sophisticated search for extraterrestrial intelligence in human history," said Carl Sagan, the popular science writer and president of the Planetary Society, who joined Spielberg, Horowitz and other astronomers at the observatory to dedicate the antenna. Afterwards, they toasted the event with champagne.

Horowitz said the antenna was capable of reaching to the edges of the known galaxy. If there is life on other planets, he said, "this kind of communications system can do the job." He said he will visit the observatory once every two weeks to check on the project.

The scanner, which took two years to construct, is more versatile than its predecessor and includes changes that should increase the chances of raising alien messages. The antenna is hooked up to a computer room, which records all radio signals emitted from space.

The previous system had turned up only the radio waves that all planets naturally produce, but improvements in the scanner keep him hoping for concrete results, Horowitz said.

He said astronomers will be looking for a narrow radio signal to indicate other life forms.

"We're looking for planetary systems around stars," he said. "There are more than 1 million stars, so the cheapest way to look at a million stars is to look at everything at once."

Because of his involvement in the project, Spielberg said he'd be happy if the antenna was the first to pick up signs of life beyond Earth.

"I just thought it was time to get involved in some science-reality," he said. "I can't write the outcome of this. I just hope that there is more floating around up there than Jackie Gleason reruns."

Parachutists killed in crash after takeoff

Associated Press

JENKINSBURG, Ga. — An airplane filled with parachutists crashed on takeoff from a private rural airstrip Sunday afternoon, killing all 17 people aboard, officials said.

The single-engine Cessna 208 Caravan crashed in a pasture, said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Roger Myers.

"The airplane was apparently climbing out after taking off and a witness stated that the engine stalled," said Preston Hicks, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator who was on the scene.

Grady Wyatt, who lives near the crash site about one mile from the West Wind Sport Parachute Center, was out in his yard when the plane flew over just above the treetops.

"The plane came up and looked like it could hardly stay up," Wyatt said. "A few minutes after that, I heard a crash, what sounded like a crash."

The plane came to rest on its back, its cockpit destroyed but the wheels intact, said Butts County Fire Chief W.L. Vaughn.

"The first report to us was that there were 17 persons on board and all were injured fatally," Myers said.

Rescue workers spent two hours pulling bodies from the wreckage, which were taken to a National Guard Armory in nearby Jackson, said Hicks.

NTSB Chairman Jim Burnett was en route to Georgia from Washington, D.C., to take charge of the investigation into the cause of the crash, said NTSB spokesman Ira Furman.
