Corps of Cadets selling Aggie game to raise $150,000

By TAMMY KIRK
Staff Writer

The Texas A&M Corps of Cadets is selling "Hullabaloo, The Game," the trivia game about Aggieland, to raise $150,000 for its organization by the end of October.

"We want to accomplish three major goals with the money we make," says Yori Escalante, public relations officer for the Corps.

First, Escalante says, the Corps wants to raise $25,000 to establish one-time scholarships for students in memory of former cadets who are killed while serving in the military.

Second, the Corps wants to raise $25,000 to put up billboards in major Texas cities, Escalante says.

Don Shafer, former student and creator of the Hullabaloo game, says, "This is not to advertise 'Come join the Corps,' but to give the Corps bragging rights like 'The Heart of Aggieland — The Corps of Cadets.'"

And last, the Corps wants to be the first student organization in the nation to set up a $100,000 endowment to use as cash awards for outstanding teachers at the University, Escalante says. He says that recognition is usually given to teachers who receive grants for research and for those who get their articles published — but not for those who dedicate themselves to excel in the classroom.

Each cadet will be asked to send 20 brochures about the Hullabaloo game to former and current students next week, Shafer says.

The game is played like Trivial Pursuit, Shafer says. Players try to answer questions in different categories to acquire pieces to "fill up their pies," Shafer says. In the Hullabaloo game, though, "the pies" are rectangles with four holes instead of Trivial Pursuit's six and the "pie pieces" are the letters T, A, M and U.

A sample question from the category of Campusology and the Corps is, "Where on campus can you stand with your feet in the Gulf of Mexico and still see the Texas Panhandle?" Answer: The Systems Building (there is a huge map of Texas on the floor).

One thousand games were sold in two weeks during December 1984, Shafer says, and only a few games have been sold in the bookstores. The main market is through the Corps since the cadets are from all over the state and can reach the most former students, he says.

Shafer also says he wouldn't mind giving exclusive selling rights to the Corps because it's a fund-raising project which could be used every year.

Shafer says he and his wife, Brenda, co-creator of the Hullabaloo game, are continually updating the questions and throwing out questions which maybe aren't as interesting as others they dig up or are sent to them from people who have played the game.

"We even had questions about the Aggies' victory over Tulane last week before the game came out," Shafer says.

Gifts are used as incentives for members of the Corps to play the game, Escalante says. If a cadet plays five games, he will receive a special insignia, and if he plays 10 games, he will receive a shirt with the same emblem.

"But the big incentive is the Cozumel (Mexico) trip which sells the most," Escalante says.

Shafer says he is paying for a trip out of his own pocket, but the trip is for four days and three nights during spring break.

"If they don't know how beautiful it is, they'll know by the time they get back," Shafer says. "The trip is beautiful."

Student group not satisfied with results of fundraising

By MEG CADIGAN
Staff Writer

The Mexican Students' Association has raised $1,200 for Mexican earthquake victims, group President Angel Gonzalez-Mendez said.

He said he thinks this is a small amount to have raised on a campus of 36,000 students.

International Students' Association Adviser Tina Watkins said there are 145 Mexican students at A&M.

Fundraising efforts will continue through this week and next, Gonzalez-Mendez said.

Alpha Kappa Alpha, Omega Phi Alpha and Delta Sigma Theta will have tables set up at various locations around campus, he said.

Gonzalez-Mendez said people who contribute at these tables will be able to specify how their money is to be channelled.

"Through (San Antonio Mayor) Henry Cisneros' direct aid program, we are buying medicine to send directly to Mexico City," he said.

Donations are being collected for the Red Cross, Gonzalez-Mendez said.

The Brazos Valley Red Cross has collected $2,166 said Disaster Chairman Marilyn Magouirk.

Gilley's owner indicted for attempted murder

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A Harris County grand jury indicted the owner of Gilley's Club, a popular country-western honky tonk, on attempted murder charges against the advice of prosecutors.

District Attorney John B. Holmes Jr. and Pasadena police say the indictments, returned Monday against club owner Sherwood Cryer, are the result of a "witchhunt."

He is accused of firing a shotgun at karate instructor Randall Everett Johnston, 27.

Johnston and another martial arts teacher, Joseph Fitzgerald Acton, were walking outside the Pasadena building where they worked Nov. 26 when the shooting occurred. Cryer turned himself in to authorities Tuesday and was released after posting $5,000 bond, said Assistant District Attorney Chuck Rosenthal.

Cryer said the indictment, which also charges him with aggravated assault, was a "totally political" attempt to retaliate against Pasadena Police Chief David Mullican, who has served as head of security at Gilley's.

"Well, that grand jury has four of (Pasadena Mayor) John Ray Harrison's men on it," Cryer said. "One of them said that the beer joint industry runs Pasadena, so they're all after me. Just check out who's on the grand jury."

Grand juror Gene Milligan of Clear Lake criticized Mullican for the department's failure to follow proper procedures and for not "following up" on the case.
