Interpersonal relationships topic of lecture

By TAMMY KIRK
Staff Writer

An adviser to black students at Southern Methodist University will discuss the pros and cons of male-female relationships Thursday at 7 p.m. in 701 Rudder.

Clarence Glover has lectured at college campuses nationwide on the topic of interpersonal relationships, but it is his first time at Texas A&M, says Eric Jefferson, program manager for the Black Awareness Committee sponsoring the program.

"I think Glover will basically hit on the differences that exist between men and women and the problems that can arise (in relationships) because of those differences," Jefferson says.

He says that students will find the lecture interesting because of Glover's emphasis on young adults.

Besides being an adviser to black students, Glover is also the coordinator of intercultural affairs at SMU. Glover received his bachelor's and master's degrees in psychology at Grambling State University in Grambling, La.

Jefferson says the committee usually brainstorms for program topics.

"We decided on interpersonal relationships because we felt it was of interest to the community," Jefferson says.

"And we want to stress that the lecture is open to the general public," he says.

Tickets are $1.

Jefferson says Glover's speech will meet the committee's goals by serving as a channel through which the public can be made aware of the problems that exist in relationships but also be given some possible solutions to these problems.

Local rodeo to offer events for students, professionals

By JO BETH MURPHY
Reporter

Punch those duggies and rustle some cattle. A rodeo is coming to town.

The rodeo, promoted by Don Cobb and Ricky Carpenter will be held at the Dick Freeman Coliseum in College Station Friday night at 8 p.m.

"Both of us are in the (rodeo promoting and stock contracting) business," Cobb says. "We have lots of livestock and we want to see if it (a rodeo) will go over."

Carpenter says promoting a rodeo is too much work to do just for fun. He says it gives him a chance to utilize his livestock and it gives contestants a chance to compete during the winter.

To try to guarantee the success of the events, Carpenter and Cobb have added special events to lure A&M students, the local community and professionals to participate.

Cobb says these special events include chute dogging, calf roping, steer riding, team steer riding and a Bevo steer roping.

Cobb says, "The Bevo steer roping uses a longhorn like at the University of Texas. (A group of contestants) tries to rope it and the first one that catches it wins."

He says he has notified fraternities and sororities about the upcoming rodeo.

But Carpenter says professional cowboys are one of the main targets.

"The main rodeo events are designed to attract contestants from a 150-to-200-mile radius," Carpenter says. "Some are designed for the community."

Professional-level events will include bull riding, bareback riding, calf roping and team roping for cowboys, and barrel racing exclusively for cowgirls.

Similar events also will be held on a junior and local level. These include a community calf roping contest for the non-professional cowboy.

Community calf roping is done in two-person teams, with the first participant roping the calf, and the second participant throwing and tying three of its legs, Carpenter says.

"We kind of designed this ourselves for people who want to be involved but aren't on the professional level," he says.

Carpenter says professional and junior level contestants will be charged an entry fee ranging from $15 per junior event to $50 per professional event. College students are welcome to enter any of the events.

Prize money will be awarded to the professionals, he says.

Cobb says trophies or prize money will be awarded to the student participants, depending on what the students would rather have.

Cobb says prize money will be awarded if the students pay an entry fee.

Anyone interested in participating can sign up at the coliseum before 8 p.m. Friday. The coliseum located off FM 2818 near the Texas A&M Equine Center.

Burl E. Hagler, a senior at Texas A&M, has received a $500 National Alpha Zeta Scholarship for the 1985-86 school year. Hagler is studying animal science, agricultural education and biology at the University. He is a member of the Texas Alpha chapter of Alpha Zeta fraternity, a professional service and honorary fraternity in agriculture.

Ronald J. Marshall, a 1965 graduate of Texas A&M, will receive the Commissioner's Citation, the Social Security Administration's highest honorary award, Thursday. Marshall is being honored for outstanding performance and excellence in administration of the Social Security programs to the public. Marshall is presently serving as the manager of the Social Security Administration branch office in Conroe.

Yell leaders to discuss their role at A&M

The Texas A&M yell leaders speak at Sully's Symposium today says Stacey Allen, the chairman of the symposium.

The outdoor open forum sponsored by Lambda Sigma is scheduled to begin at 11:50 a.m. by the Laurence Sullivan Ross statue in front of the Academic Building.

Allen says the five students speak on how they are elected and the ways they represent A&M in addition to their function at sports events.

Head Yell Leader Thomas Buford says that most people think yell leaders only appear at football and basketball games, but that impression is wrong.

"We do a number of other things such as tradition programs," Buford says. "We've gone up to the mountains, for instance, and given out about traditions. There's been one where a local businessman called up and asks us to help with a charity event. If we can work it in, we will."

After the speeches, the yell leaders will answer questions from the audience until 12:30 p.m.

This is the second symposium Buford, the only yell leader returning from last year, and the first the others.

Lambda Sigma, the sophomore honor society, sponsors the symposium as a student service. It is every Wednesday.

Allen says the symposium will be cancelled if it rains.
