Resignation is loss

Italy, an important NATO ally.

"We all have been trying to show terrorists can't achieve anything by what they do," said Helmut Sonnenfeldt, a former senior Nixon administration official who is now a guest scholar at the Brookings Institution here. "The terrorists didn't intend to overthrow the Italian government, but it is unfortunate that a terrorist incident can have an effect of this magnitude."

Sonnenfeldt said the Craxi government "has been on the whole a very good and effective government from an American standpoint and a NATO standpoint. To lose this government is a setback."

The consequences of the Achille Lauro hijacking, including the American seizing of an Egyptian aircraft carrying the fleeing hijackers, continue to grow. Most of the positive gains were immediately apparent.

Not the least of the positive gains is a feeling by Americans that after years of painful losses to terrorists, the national pride has finally been upheld with the capture of the accused murderers of 69-year-old Leon Klinghoffer.

In addition, the capture of the hijackers showed an American firmness and level of technological expertise that will improve the nation's ability to deal with future terrorist attacks, experts say.

The already close bonds between the United States and Israel may be strengthened even more, as Israeli leaders believe their rejection of the Palestine Liberation Organization as a terrorist group has been vindicated.

On the negative side, the fall of the Italian government becomes a major loss. In its current issue, the Economist newspaper of London said the pro-Western Craxi had given Italy one of its most stable and prosperous governments since World War II and "could be remembered as the man who changed his country."

Another setback is friction in relations with Egypt, which has long been the United States' chief Arab ally.

The fall of Premier Craxi stemmed from a decision to release a suspected terrorist, Mohammed Abbas, who was accused by the Reagan administration of planning the hijacking.

Italian Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini withdrew from the Craxi government coalition — to protest the handling of the Abbas matter — causing the government's collapse.

games, Desai said she hopes to keep good records of all the events.

This year, 20 clubs representing different countries and areas have registered. Last year 17 groups participated.

PUF effects discussed

est earned by their portions of the fund, Payne says. He adds that the legality of that legislative action is still in question. PUF schools have always been able to keep interest earnings.

"The non-PUF schools have a significant concern that the state of Texas is moving toward creating three levels of funding," Payne says. "The top level is UT and A&M. The next level is all the rest of the PUF schools, and the third level is the non-PUF schools. If the boards of regents use interest earnings to subsidize the operations of the non-central campuses, I think that this will become an issue."

"All state institutions get a biennial budget, the difference is that UT and A&M are able to subsidize that budget in any area with the AUF. So if they have a particular problem in an area, UT and A&M can solve that problem by using the AUF, in addition to using it for academic enrichment."

The Legislature appropriated about $10 million of the fund for Texas Southern University, the Texas Tech University Health Science Center and the Texas College of Osteopathic Medicine in Fort Worth. John Alexander, associate vice president for planning and budgeting at the University of Houston, says that the remaining $90 million is distributed among the non-PUF state schools based on three criteria:

- Review by an independent consultant of the major repair needs of the universities.
- Measure of the classroom space per student at each university.
- Calculation of a campus formula based on the complexity of programs at each university.

A joint committee of university presidents and coordinating boards makes recommendations to the Legislature based on these criteria, Alexander says. The Legislature approved all the recommendations this year. The amount of money calculated for each institution is allocated for each of the next five years, he says, and then the allocation process will be reviewed.

The University of Houston is receiving $15.7 million from the fund,
