Tutors

Students and faculty offering help services

By KATHERINE GOLLEY
Reporter

Midterm grades for Texas A&M students are due in the registrar's office Monday. And for those students who aren't going to be happy with the grades they get, there is help available.

Two freshmen honor societies, Alpha Lambda Delta and Phi Eta Sigma, have combined efforts to offer free tutoring.

"We have been here for years, and only a handful of people has ever heard about us," says Cathy Chickering, president of Phi Eta Sigma. "We would like more people to know about our program and take advantage of it."

Tera Hulse, the society's adviser, says about 75 to 100 of the group's 300 members participate in the tutorial program.

"Many of our tutors have not even been called for help once, which shows that our system can accommodate many more requests than it is receiving," Chickering says.

A majority of classes tutored are freshman or first-level classes, such as chemistry and math.

"Because it is sophomores who are doing the tutoring, we usually tutor freshman-level classes although we are not limited to just that level," Chickering says. "We have a graduate student and some upper-level students who offer their help for the upper-division classes."

Information about tutoring is available in the Alpha Lambda Delta/Phi Eta Sigma cubicle in the Department of Student Activities on the second floor of the Pavilion.

Files contain cards that list the course the student is willing to tutor, the professor who taught that course and the semester the course was taken.

Chickering says it is best to copy several different phone numbers of students tutoring the same class, in case one isn't available.

"The tutors are students also, so they have their own tests and deadlines to worry about too," Chickering says.

The Texas A&M Mentor program also offers help to students, both academically and socially.

Kevin Carreathers, the student activities adviser and a mentor, says more than 350 faculty and staff who are involved in the voluntary mentor program are willing to help students.

Carreathers says he gets about four calls a day from students asking him questions such as "Should I change my major?" to "How do I get a summer job?"

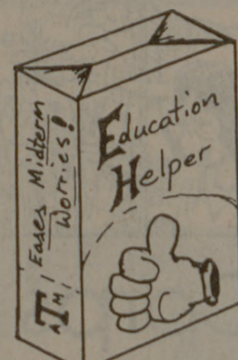

Mentors in each academic department can be identified by the mentor shingle pasted to the door, or they can be found in a book listing the mentors by department.

Mentors are willing to help the student either with a problem in a particular subject or with something personal, Carreathers says.

"I would like to encourage students to identify the mentors in their areas of studies and use them," he says. "Everyone involved in the program has volunteered to help, and they welcome the students' questions."

In addition to these general tutorial or help services, each department has its own program.

Departments in the engineering college have help desks or teaching assistants available in the specific subjects.

John Rigas, a senior petroleum engineering major, says although the petroleum engineering department does not have an official desk, the Society of Petroleum Engineers has a room with plenty of various class material and people are always willing to answer a question.

The College of Science also has a similar program with each department offering help in its area.

Dr. Yi-Noo Tang, principal coordinator for the freshman chemistry program, says his department has five programs to help students who are having trouble.

Tang stresses the one-on-one programs that are offered to the students.

"We have a professor-tutoring program in which instructors are available most of the weekday hours to answer students' questions and changing assistant-tutorial programs which laboratory assistants are available most of the week hours," Tang says.

In addition to these programs many review sessions and special fore-test reviews also are offered.

"Some students feel they are more if they pay for a tutor, but we also have a list of tutors with rates and the classes they would tutor posted on bulletin boards in the chemistry building," Tang says.

The College of Business also offers help desks and review sessions through the specific departments.

Shelli Shivers, a Business School Council representative, says the course offers its own help which is set up by the coordinator of the course. It is best to go to the course department in which need help either for a tutorial or for a schedule of help sessions.

Around town

Yell practice to be in Waco

Midnight yell practice will be held tonight at the Waco Convention Center. The Center is on Washington Avenue near the Hall.

Baylor hosting reception for Aggies

Baylor University is sponsoring an afternoon reception Saturday preceding the Baylor-Texas A&M football game. The reception will be held in the Barfield Drawing Room of the Bill Daniel Student Center from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. All students and alumni are invited.

Science students must take exam

Any junior or senior in the College of Science who has not previously taken the English Proficiency Examination should plan to take the test on one of the following dates: Oct. 22, Oct. 29, Nov. 12 or Nov. 14. Students must take the proficiency examination unless they have completed English 301 with a minimum grade of C. Students entering the College of Science under catalog #107 or #108 must complete English 301 as required in their degree program. They are not required to take this exam. The English Proficiency Exam will be administered by the English Department. Students in the biology, chemistry, mathematics and physics departments should register for the exam in 151 or 152 Blocker no less than three days prior to the exam date. All exams begin at 6:45 p.m. and end at 8 p.m.

Charity bazaar to be held this weekend

Post Oak Mall will hold its Fourth Annual Community Club Bazaar on Friday, Saturday and Sunday during regular mall hours. Twenty-eight non-profit clubs and organizations from the Brazos Valley will have booths throughout the mall selling homemade baked goods and handmade craft items. Profits from the bazaar go directly to the individual organization making the sales.

NOW sponsors talent show on Monday

The Brazos Valley Chapter of NOW, the National Organization of Women, is sponsoring a talent show Monday at 7 p.m. at the College Station Community Center, 1300 Jersey St. The show features 15 talent acts, including singing, recitations and an all-female band. Admission is $3 at the door.
