Suspect says slain woman depressed, wanted to die

Associated Press
FORT WORTH — A man who claims he killed a young woman at her request because she was depressed goes on trial today on a murder charge.
 Michael Wayne Goodin, 19, faces trial in the Jan. 9 shooting death of Lisa Griffin, one of nine Fort Worth women who disappeared or were found slain in an unsolved series of crimes.
 Goodin has been ruled out as a suspect in the other killings.
 Goodin was arrested June 21 after he gave authorities a statement and took officers to the railroad tracks in southwest Tarrant County where Griffin's body had been found six months earlier.

 The prosecution, headed by Tarrant County Assistant District Attorney Rufus Adcock, claims Goodin shot Griffin with a .22 caliber weapon at close range.
 Defense lawyer Travis Young, contends that Griffin was taking drugs at the time of her death and was so depressed that she asked Goodin to kill her.
 "She just kept saying, 'I want somebody to shoot me,'" Goodin said during a jailhouse interview last July. "I guess she didn't have the nerve to do it."

 An autopsy report filed by the Tarrant County medical examiner shows that Griffin's urine contained traces of cocaine and amphetamines.
 Lavonne Griffin, the victim's mother, angrily denied that her daughter wanted to commit suicide.
 "She was a beautiful, well-adjusted girl. She was working at two jobs. Like any young girl, she had problems, but she could handle them," Griffin said. "Goodin didn't have the license to kill her just because she was depressed, if she even was depressed."

A&M students charged with theft

 later admitted to stealing it.
 "They were trying to use the parts to rebuild a Mazda that one of the guys (Tinker) already had," Wiatt said.
 He said a search warrant was obtained for Tinker's Mazda and University Police recovered a moon roof, car stereo and car cover that recently had been reported stolen.

 Because the suspects were in possession of additional stolen car parts, they also may face additional criminal charges, Wiatt said.
 Felony theft and burglary of a motor vehicle charges are third degree felonies and each carries a prison sentence of from two to 10 years and a fine of up to $5,000.

 "In addition to the criminal charges, the matter will be referred to the student affairs department," he said.
 Punishment from the Department of Student Affairs could range from conduct probation to expulsion, Wiatt said.
