Lady Aggies looking 'four-ward' to Frogs

By CHAREAN WILLIAMS
Assistant Sports Editor

Four will be a significant number for the Texas A&M women's basketball team tonight.

The Lady Aggies have a three-game win streak, and a victory in tonight's TCU game could make it four in a row. They also will be trying to retain a solid hold on fourth place in the Southwest Conference.

Coach Lynn Hickey's Lady Ags (6-4 in the SWC, 13-9 overall) travel to Fort Worth tonight for a 7:30 meeting with the Lady Horned Frogs (1-10, 5-17).

A&M's 78-68 win over SMU this past Saturday night, combined with Houston's 83-75 loss to Texas Tech Wednesday night, moved the Lady Ags a game ahead of the Lady Cougars.

With only six conference games remaining before the SWC postseason tournament, A&M's remaining games against the last-place teams, TCU and Rice (Feb. 25), are must-wins for the Lady Aggies.

A&M still must face the nation's No. 1 team, Texas, Saturday night in Austin. The Lady Ags also have Arkansas (9-2, 16-5), the second-place team in the conference, and the third-place team, Texas Tech (8-2, 15-6) remaining on their schedule.

A&M also has to play Houston again. The Lady Cougs (5-5, 14-7) are on the Aggies' heels and have already downed A&M once this season.

So tonight begins the stretch run, and for all practical purposes it will be A&M's last "easy" game before the SWC tournament.

And while a team with a 1-10 SWC record doesn't sound like much of a challenge, the Ags can't afford to look past the Frogs.

TCU showed what it's capable of when it came within three points of upsetting Baylor Saturday night.

Coach Frances Garmon's Frogs are led by sophomore Carol Glover, whose 13.9 scoring average ranks her sixth in the SWC. Freshman Kathleen Olson, a candidate for the SWC's Newcomer of the Year, is averaging 11.1 points and 6.9 rebounds per game.

The Lady Aggies will counter with the SWC's fourth leading scorer, guard Lisa Langston, who is averaging 15.9 points and 6.7 rebounds per game.
