Input
Judge's plan to aid victims held a success

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — A judge who has begun giving crime victims input during the sentencing process has termed the program a success.

Since 1983, when State District Judge Tom Rickhoff said he would ask for victims' opinions, the policy has been used statewide.

Bexar County's chief probation officer, Caesar Garcia, said he is required, in cases with a guilty plea, to ask victims to fill out a "victim impact statement."

The statement asks for the victim's opinion on sentencing, and if restitution is needed for medical bills, property damage or stolen property.

"The majority of people we call have no objection to them being put on probation," he said.

Asking victims for their input in sentencing is nothing new, said Dick Lewis, public information officer for the Texas Adult Probation Commission in Austin.

Probation officers for years have made such input a part of their present investigation.

The Legislature, in making victims' statements a requirement, reacted with a higher degree of sensitivity to victims and their rights, Lewis said.

Defense lawyer Van Hilley said he has no problem with the process if it is handled by a probation officer.

"As long as you trust it to the expertise of a probation officer, it will provide the judge with a broader perspective in sentencing," he said. "In the majority of cases, I don't think it will have a significant impact."

But another attorney, Sam Bayless, said he doesn't agree.

A criminal case, he said, is "not a personal case brought on behalf of the victim. It's brought on behalf of the state. Everybody's best interest is concerned. The victim's best interest might not be the same thing."

Rickhoff said he usually takes the victims' feelings into account during sentencing, but he said he does not make them the deciding factor in determining punishment.

The most important factor is the criminal record of the defendant, he said. Also taken into consideration are whether a weapon was used and the violence involved in the crime, he said.

Rickhoff said he remembered one case in which he gave an elderly man probation after he shot his ill brother in a "mercy killing." The victim's widow "said God will guide you. I'm not looking for any jail time for him," Rickhoff recalled.

Rickhoff granted the man probation and ordered him to work with elderly people as a requirement of his probation.

Some victims are bitter, Rickhoff said, especially those who are seriously injured or paralyzed for life.

Rickhoff, who is in charge of the juvenile docket in Bexar County, said he has instituted the policy with foster parents. He asks them for their input in determining where abused and neglected children should be placed.

"Previously, foster parents wouldn't come to court," he said. "But they wanted to have more input on what the court would do with the kids."
