Chagra says sister-in-law innocent of charge

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Elizabeth Chagra had part in her husband's drug-smuggling operations or his plans to kill a federal court judge, her brother-in-law testified Wednesday. Joe Chagra, a former El Paso attorney, testified, "Liz had nothing to do with any of the investigations." It is his second day of testimony in the retrial of Mrs. Chagra. She is accused of conspiracy in the 1979 assassination of U.S. District Judge John Wood of San Antonio. Joe Chagra, younger brother of Jimmy Chagra, is serving a 10-year prison sentence after pleading guilty to helping plot the death of Wood, who was known as "Maximum John" for the stiff sentences he gave drug dealers. Jimmy Chagra is serving concurrent 47-year and life sentences in connection with Wood's death and the attempted assassination of former U.S. Attorney James Kerr. Mrs. Chagra, 31, was convicted in 1982 of conspiracy in Wood's slaying, but an appeals court overturned the verdict because of improper jury instructions. She is scheduled to testify later. Joe Chagra, 31, testifying for the state under protest, testified Tuesday he twice advised Jimmy Chagra, as his brother and attorney, to go ahead with plans to have Wood killed. He said he considered Wood an unfair judge who gave stiff sentences. On cross examination Wednesday by defense attorney Warren Burnett, Joe Chagra said he, Jimmy and a third brother, Lee — who was murdered in 1980 in El Paso — frequently discussed Jimmy's drug smuggling operations in Florida that later brought on an FBI investigation.

"Liz had nothing to do with Jimmy's smuggling operations," he testified. He said Mrs. Chagra never attended any of their meetings in Florida or in Las Vegas, and that to the best of his knowledge was never asked for advice. Joe Chagra was asked if Mrs. Chagra knew about conversations between him and Jimmy Chagra about the possible slaying of Wood. "She was never told of those conversations," Joe Chagra said. Mrs. Chagra's trial is expected to last up to four weeks.

Salvadoran leftists meet with Carter

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Former President Jimmy Carter talked Wednesday with Salvadoran leftist leaders who said they found him sympathetic to their call for dialogue with their country's U.S.-supported government. "Human rights in El Salvador is a question of dialogue," said Guillermo Ungo, leader of the Democratic Revolutionary Front. "Carter asked for the meeting with us and he has said he favors the dialogue."

The front is the political ally of the Farabundi Marti National Liberation Front, known by its Spanish initials as the FMLN, an umbrella group for President Jose Napoleon Duarte. About 60,000 people, a majority of them civilians, have been killed in the fighting. Ungo, during a news conference, said the 50-minute private talk with Carter included an exchange of views on U.S. policies in Central America.

"We found him very well-informed, interested and with a realistic spirit," Ungo said. The leftists have been pushing for renewed talks with the Duarte government, last held in November 1984.

In those meetings, the left has insisted on a power-sharing arrangement, a step unacceptable to the Duarte government.

Carter, who arrived here Tuesday, told journalists earlier in El Salvador that he found human rights violations in that country.

"There are still some very serious violations of human rights in El Salvador, from the remaining death squads that are operating to long imprisonment of people without trial," he said.

"There are some allegations — I have no proof of this — that there has been indiscriminate bombing that has killed or injured innocent civilians," he said. "But I think it's obvious there has been great progress in El Salvador on the human rights question in recent months."

The former U.S. president on Wednesday also met with President Miguel de la Madrid and separately with representatives of Mexico's nine political parties.

The government news agency Notimex said he spoke about the foreign debt, saying that creditors should be more prudent.

Mexico holds an external debt of $96.4 billion, second only to Brazil in the developing world.

Tuesday Carter announced that the Carter Center in Atlanta would host a conference on Latin American foreign debt and its impacts in April.

The former president also visited Venezuela, Costa Rica and Nicaragua on a fact-finding tour.

He is writing a book about Latin America.
