Civilian Texans aid Central America

Associated Press

DALLAS — From warehouses in Addison to humble Fort Worth neighborhoods, Texans are pouring thousands of dollars into the fight to overthrow the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

William Murray ships food, medical supplies, clothing and Christmas packages to the Contras from a warehouse in Addison.

Lanny Duyck of Garland sold his home and BMW to maintain the small hospital he set up in Honduras to aid Nicaraguan refugees.

Gary Bennett of Fort Worth spent $14,000 of his own money in Honduras last year. He said he plans to continue going back to Honduras as long as he can raise money.

Capt. O.L. "Pappy" Hicks of Troup, president of the Civilian-Military Assistance of Texas, says there are limits to what he can do for the Contras.

"We do not train groups to go down there — that's against the law. We do not deal in arms and ammunition — that's against the law. We are not a wild-eyed, right-wing radical bunch," Hicks, a retired paratrooper, told Dallas Life Magazine, a Sunday supplement to The Dallas Morning News.

Many U.S. citizens became interested in helping when Congress stopped aid to the Contras in 1984, Murray said. Non-military aid resumed a few months ago.

Murray maintains that if communism is not stopped in Nicaragua, it will spread to Mexico and millions of refugees will flee across the Rio Grande.

Although there is no reliable estimate on exactly how much Contra aid has come from Texas, the high level of support in the state is one reason the World Anti-Communist League, with chapters in 98 countries, held its annual conference in Dallas last September, Dallas Life Magazine reported.

"I don't think there is a conservative organization in Dallas that is not involved," Murray said, adding that help from Dallas Republican clubs and members of area churches enabled him to take about $400,000 in medical supplies to Honduras last year.

Bennett said he has also received help from different types of people.

"Most of them are just individual people," he said. "I've got everything from heavy beer-drinkers to militant people . . . to pastors. It's just a spectrum."

With a "couple hundred" members in Texas, Hicks estimates his group has so far been able to raise about $300,000 in medical supplies, clothes and donations.

Hicks said the CMA of Texas has directed its efforts toward aiding Miskito Indians and English-speaking Creoles who have been fighting the Sandinistas.

Come where careers take wing

Discover LTV Aerospace and Defense Company, a leader in aero products and advanced missile systems

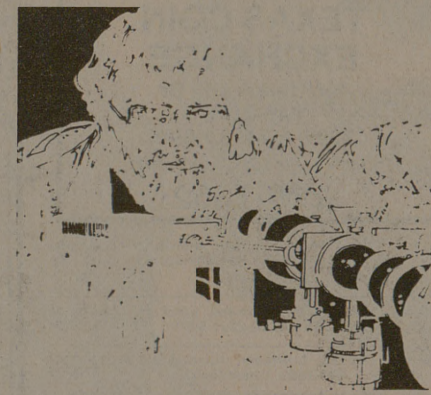

Among our accomplishments, we designed major sections of the B-1B Bomber. We were a major subcontractor on the space shuttle. And recently, we built the American aerospace industry's largest, most sophisticated automatic machining operation. And that's just a small part of our success story.

Now, to help sustain our momentum, we're looking for qualified new grads as well as experienced aerospace professionals and technicians.

At LTV Aerospace and Defense Company, you'll work in an environment that encourages career growth. We're large enough to offer you major opportunities and rewards. Yet we're small enough that individual ability and effort really stand out.

If you'd like to be part of our team, send your résumé today to Vought Aero Products Division, P.O. Box 225907, MS 49-18, Dept. ME, Dallas, Texas 75265. Or Vought Missiles and Advanced Programs Division, P.O. Box 650003, MS TH22, Dept. ME, Dallas, Texas 75265-0003.
