Police beat

The following incidents were reported to the Texas A&M University Police Department through Monday:

FALSE ALARM:
• A Physical Plant worker reported receiving a telephone call from a man saying there was a fire in Rudder Tower. University Police found no fire.

• University Police received a telephone call from a man saying a fire was occurring in Rudder Tower. No fire was found.

• University Police received a telephone call from a man saying the Memorial Student Center was on fire. No fire was found.

• University Police received a telephone call from a man saying the O&M Building was on fire. No fire was found.

HARASSMENT BY PHONE-/CRIMINAL MISCHIEF:

• A man reported finding an ignited smoke bomb underneath his desk chair in his Aston Hall dormitory room. The man said he also discovered obscene messages on his telephone recording machine.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT:

• Four men were seen running nude in the MSC and causing a disturbance. One of the men sat on the MSC front desk while the desk clerk was trying to register a guest. As the men were leaving the building, they were yelling and knocking over check cashing signs.

• University Police said a man, who was angry because his girlfriend wanted him to leave a party in Puryear Hall, picked up a toilet in Puryear Hall and dropped it on the sidewalk, causing it to shatter. The man was taken to Brazos County Jail and incarcerated.

RECKLESS CONDUCT-/FALSE STATEMENT TO A UNIVERSITY OFFICIAL:

• A woman in Mosher Hall reported that she saw a man riding a moped in the breezeway on the first floor of her dorm. University Police said they contacted a man to whom the moped was registered, but the man said he had sold the moped to a woman. Police said the man further stated that the last time he saw the moped, it was in possession of the woman's brother. University Police said they contacted the brother and asked him to report to the University Police Department. Police said the man told them he didn't have any information about the moped. The incident was referred to the Department of Student Affairs.

DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED:

• University Police said they observed an Oldsmobile parked at an angle at an intersection of Industrial Road. University Police said they found a woman behind the wheel of the vehicle who appeared to be disoriented, incoherent and whose speech was slurred. Police said the University Ambulance Service was called to the scene, and they found a fifth of vodka, some orange juice and a plastic beer cup half full of vodka. University Police said the woman was transported to the emergency room of St. Joseph Hospital and admitted with an electrolyte imbalance.

Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said, "At this particular juncture it looks like an avoidable accident rather than an unavoidable one."

Panel members also expressed irritation at William Rogers, head of a presidential investigating commission, for refusing to permit congressional aides to attend his panel's closed-door sessions.

Rogers said Challenger's right solid fuel rocket booster appeared to be the area where the trouble that led to the nation's worst space disaster started.

But Rogers told the panel it would be a mistake to focus all attention on the suspect rocket.

He said the shuttle's huge external fuel tank may have been a contributor to the Jan. 28 accident.

Rogers also disclosed the strut that attaches the booster rocket to the larger external fuel tank was broken some time during the flight.

Rogers resisted all attempts to make him state a possible cause for the explosion.

Speculation on the cause of the nation's worst space disaster has centered almost from the outset on the right-hand solid rocket booster that helps propel the space shuttle into launch.

Investigators want to know if a seal joining segments of the rocket failed at the moment of ignition — possibly because of cold weather.

In his testimony, Graham at first sidestepped the question of whether Morton Thiokol, the solid rocket booster manufacturer, had opposed the decision to launch the shuttle.

But later, when he was pressed, Hollings and others, he said, "the evidence was in the other direction" and said the company's written statement "recommended that from their perspective launch proceed."

But Graham and Moore later testified that initially, Morton Thiokol's officials had expressed concern about launching in cold weather.
