Across America they're playing the NCAA basketball bracket game this week for the women as well as the men as everyone keeps guessing where teams will be matched when the tournament pairings are announced Sunday.

But Andy Landers, coach of second-ranked Georgia (29-1) isn't interested in participating in any guessing games at the moment.

"I told the players that people will try to figure out all kinds of matchups for us in the NCAA tournament in terms of the title game, but to keep it all in perspective," Landers said. "There are just too many good teams out there to look that far ahead."

Others, however, are forecasting an eventual showdown between Georgia and Texas, 28-0, the team the Southeastern Conference champions continue to pursue.

The Longhorns once again were an overwhelming choice for No. 1 in this week's poll announced Tuesday. Coach Jody Conradt's team, which will go after its 115th straight Southwest Conference victory in the league semifinals on Thursday in Dallas, received 59 of 60 first-place votes and 1,199 points from a nationwide panel of women's coaches.

Georgia grabbed the remaining first-place vote, and 1,140 total points.

Meanwhile, Virginia, 26-2, was victimized by Maryland 92-68 in the Atlantic Coast semifinals and fell from third to sixth.

Southern California, 26-4, which lost to Northeast Louisiana 70-68 still managed to move up a notch and replace Virginia in third place.

Louisiana Tech, 23-4, moved up two spots to fourth, while Western Kentucky, 27-3, which also lost to Northeast Louisiana, 88-84, dropped a spot to fifth.

Long Beach State, 26-3, held seventh, while Rutgers, 25-2, held eighth.

Louisiana State exchanged places with Auburn, 23-5 and moved up a spot to ninth.

The second ten: Mississippi, Iowa, Ohio State, Penn State, Tennessee, North Carolina, Oklahoma, James Madison, Southern Illinois, and Villanova and Vanderbilt tied at 20th.
