

Fashion station 4

Calvert 6

Dear Readers:

Last week, while most of you were basking on the beach, we visited Calvert, Texas, right outside of Hearne. It's a beautiful old town that looks like all old towns are supposed to but rarely do. It's a perfect place for an Easter picnic or just a drive to see the blue bonnets. As an added treat, next weekend, during the town's home tour, private residences will be open to the public. Hope you enjoy At Ease. Have a good weekend.

Reviewer Matt Diedrich is back from "Brazil" and off to see "Gung Ho." Join us and see how gung ho he's about it.

Gas station fashion.....4

Snobbish as it sounds, most of us don't shop for a high-fashion wardrobe in Hearne, especially not in a Texaco. But Dee and Ann Weatherford are putting their gas station fashions on the map with commuter customers and students, too. Staff writer Nancy Feigenbaum takes us for a visit.

The town that time forgot?6

At least that's what some of the residents of Calvert think about their town. The Victorian ambiance of the little town on Highway 6 escaped what most of us consider progress. With its historic homes and shops, Calvert is the self-proclaimed "Antique Capital of Texas." Join Tricia Parker for a visit.
