Houston laser show praised city workers begin clean up

HOUSTON (AP) — Jean-Michel Jarre, the French musician who masterminded a laser show in downtown Houston, was glowing following his performance, but city work crews weren't thrilled with picking up after 1.5 million spectators.

Don Olson, chief of the city's Park and Recreation Department, said he hoped to have everything spic and span by late Monday. Olson said one of his employees compared the clean-up operation to 40 outdoor Houston theater shows.

It was the largest outdoor gathering in Houston history, but only six arrests for public intoxication were made, police said. Traffic on downtown-area freeways also came to a complete stop.

Saturday's 90-minute laser and light show was a "magical moment" for Jarre, who spent a year planning the extravaganza.

Jarre said Sunday he had never been to Houston until a year ago when he started planning the show.

"It was an encounter," he said. "The city asked me to put together the project, and it fitted with the concept. All of this is part of a big, magical adventure. It was a magical moment.

"When I think of it, it's incredible. People here should be very proud of themselves."

Most spectators, including Mayor Kathy Whitmire, raved about the outdoor performance that turned the skyline into an artist's canvas of reds, yellows and blues, all set to synthesized music.

"I thought it was magical," Whitmire said. "It turned out much grander event than I had imagined."

Jarre said he hopes the media spectacular, "Rendezvous in Texas: A City in Concert," will lift the spirits of Houston, which has suffered economic problems caused by dwindling oil prices.

Jarre paid a special tribute to Challenger astronaut Ron Smith, who was supposed to play on his saxophone composed by Jarre while in space. The seven-member Challenger crew died when space shuttle exploded after launch on Jan. 28.

"The concert had made me really richer," Jarre said. "I have made Houstonians richer."

Fall Program
Come to Italy with us during the Fall of 1986. Faculty of the University of Florence and the Italian Association are offering courses again this year that will interest students in art, architecture, design, liberal arts, art history, landscape architecture and other related disciplines.

Courses
Study opportunities include lecture, studio, and seminar courses in Italian culture, art and architecture, design theory and practice, beginning and advanced photo-graphics, as well as special problems courses for individual study. Courses and field trips explore great works of art and architecture, major cultural movements, art trends, paintings, sculpture, and lives of important personalities that influenced the western world.

"It was great to be there, see things I've only read about (and do things I've never read about!)"
Donna Kacmar, ITALART student, 1985

"I learned a lot about Italy from the kids in Ponte and Figline - Andrea, Gianni, etc. My Italian friends showed me the true culture of today in Italy."
John Patterson, ITALART student, 1985

La Poggerina
Participants in the program live and study in La Poggerina, the Italart Center, a picturesque seminary, formerly used by Catholic brothers. The Center is located in the Tuscan Hills south of Florence near the small city of Figline Valdarno. The facility includes student and faculty living quarters, galleries, classrooms, studio, lounge and recreation facilities, as well as a dining hall complete with fireplace and Italian.

INFORMATION
Opportunities exist for student and faculty participation in programs sponsored by ITALART. Additional information and applications for admission may be obtained from:
