ment with the Southland decision and said it was "absurd" to consider Playboy pornographic. Salvers said, "Southland apparently believes the Meese commission has concluded that reading Playboy may be harmful. It's not true. The commission has not issued a report yet."

Robert Guccione, publisher of Penthouse magazine, apparently was ready for Southland's announcement. In Thursday's editions of the Austin American-Statesman, he took out an ad urging citizens to patronize stores that don't bow to "censorship."

The ad said, "Just as I have every constitutional right to publish 'Penthouse,' so you, too, have every constitutionally protected right to read it or ignore it. But there's one right that no one has — and that's the right to stop other people from reading books or magazines of their own choice. That's censorship!"

Falwell, the leader of the Moral Majority, told Dallas radio station KRLD. "This is going to put the pornography industry on its knees."
