State leaders disagree on how to spend oil revenue

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas received more than $424 million from the federal government Monday, but state officials disagreed about how to spend it.

Although Comptroller Bob Bullock directed Treasurer Ann Richards to split the money between two funds that aid public schools — the Available University Fund and the Permanent University Fund, but Richards is waiting for an official OK from the attorney general.

The money — totaling $424,868,484 — is the state's share of a settlement with the federal government over oil revenues from the Gulf of Mexico.

According to Attorney General Jim Mattox, "The $424 million ends a long battle with the federal government over a state's right to revenue from oil and gas produced along the boundary between state and federal coastal waters in the Gulf."

Mattox said his staff is working on a legal opinion as to where the money should go. Some officials say it should go to schools, while others said the Legislature should decide.

Earlier this money, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis said the money should go into the state's general revenue fund until the 1987 Legislature can decide how the money is to be used.

On Monday, Bullock told Richards to split the money between the two public school funds.

But Richards, citing Mattox's advice, deposited the money in the state's general revenue fund until the legal research is finished.

University Drive to be widened in '87

By Craig Renfro
 Staff Writer

If you think University Drive can't handle its traffic flow, help is on the way. It will be widened from four to six lanes beginning in spring 1987.

According to Carol Ziegler, district engineer for Bryan, the $985,000 project also will provide for a new riding surface and a continuous left turn lane from Texas Avenue to Wellborn Road.

Moffatt Adams, chief architect for the Texas A&M University System, said the state will pay for everything except the installation of a new curb and gutter. These costs will be split between A&M and the city of College Station, Adams said.

The project is scheduled for completion by the spring 1988, he said.

Adams said the project will widen University Drive on the campus side of the road. All angle parking along University Drive will be eliminated to make room for the project, he said.

Planning for the project is in the preliminary stages, and the University's budget for the project has not been determined, Adams said.

He said the project will help alleviate traffic problems and, when the parking garage is completed in the summer 1988, it will give traffic easier access to the garage.

David Pullen, College Station engineer, said the project is in the preliminary design stage.

"We are working with the highway department and Facilities Planning and Construction (on campus) in conjunction with the parking garage project," Pullen said.

The major change will be elimination of parking along University Drive, Pullen said.

According to a report from State Department of Highway Public Transportation, the project is part of a $20.2 million state program to upgrade safety on the highways.

"It will give us an extra lane to come out of from the parking garage," Adams said. "That should speed the flow of traffic up."

Ziegler said one reason for the widening project is to increase safety standards. Ziegler said the project will not decrease traffic any, but the installation of safety lights and traffic signals will make it safer.

Ziegler said the project was just approved and many details need to be worked out with the city and the University.

"Intersection details and width requirements are just a few of the things to be worked out," he said.

Governors to meet at White's 'energy summit'

IRVING (AP) — Seven governors and representatives of three others gather here Tuesday for a "summit on energy" organized by Texas Gov. Mark White.

James Schlesinger, former secretary of energy and defense for President Jimmy Carter, was announced Monday as the luncheon speaker.

White called the summit to discuss problems faced by states as a result of declining oil prices.

His invitation was accepted by Govs. George Nigh of Oklahoma, Toney Anaya of New Mexico, Bill Clinton of Arkansas, Ed Herschler of Wyoming, George Sinner of North Dakota and John Carlin of Kansas.

Representatives will be sent by Govs. Arch Moore of West Virginia, Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky and Bill Sheffield of Alaska.

After Schlesinger's speech, each of the governors will make a short statement. Several guest speakers will then make presentations, followed by a federal discussion.

Nigh said Monday he will use the summit to discuss a proposed natural gas compact commission, although he is cool to the idea.

The Oklahoma House and Senate have passed a resolution calling Nigh to discuss the gas compact with the governors of Texas, Louisiana and New Mexico at the summit.

Oklahoma and the three states count for nearly half of the production of natural gas, according to Sen. Gene Stipe, D-McAlester, sponsor of the resolution.
